Implementation

INTRODUCTION

The three important components to the efficient implementation of any policy are the societal, regional, and consumer levels. This represents a multi-level approach and the professional must have an ability to function efficiently on each level with the appropriate methodology. Currently, managers usually have an ability to work only on one level. Therefore, a contingency model is now being advocated. The theme of the three following articles is isolation of the appropriate management technique and its application for the level being studied to solve problems.
