Tack left the University's educational administration and supervision department this summer to become the chair of the leadership and counseling department at Eastern Michigan University. Her areas of expertise are leadership and planning in higher education, and she told the graduating class that there is a great need for leadership in today's society.

"The key ingredient in leadership is passion and an enthusiasm for living and working that's contagious. It's a sense of caring so deeply that you're willing to make major personal sacrifices to see that something happens," she said.

She challenged the audience that on their graduation day they should set a mandate to set a mark on our world. Because this isn't a dress rehearsal—"That means holding meetings beforehand with the other 20 faculty, military and student marshals. If anyone goes in the wrong direction, then it's basically my problem." But the key I've learned through the years is to always act like you know what you're doing.

After years of attending commencements, Guthrie has seen it all. He remembers ceremonies where it rained and snowed, where students have streaked through the stadium, and where parents have threatened to clobber administrators who told them they weren't allowed on the field while the graduation was taking place.

In all the ceremonies he witnessed, he said the guest who impressed him the most was strong sense of personal integrity.

-Do you have a vision of where you would like to be? Do you know how to make dreams become reality?

- Are you self-confident? Do you focus on your successes rather than whining about your problems? Can you deal with loneliness without difficulty or must you always be the center of attention and the one who is always sharing information? Would you rather be informed by others or would you rather inform anyone else, Task advised. Look like a pillar of strength because people don't follow weakness.

- Are you an expert at something? Do you have some trait that sets you apart from others?

- Are you willing to take risks to get ahead? Will you make decisions? Risk-taking is firmly associated with effective leadership. Have the courage to risk again and again to achieve something.

"These people who never make errors are not doing anything. Anything requires health, happiness and harmony always prevalent on the cutting edge," Task said.

Guthrie from the front
Fred Rogers, better known as Mr. Rogers the television personality who received his postgraduate degree from BGSU. "He was amazing. He got up on stage and had the graduates singing — he had them in his hand," Task said.

Despite some complaints and criticism about commencement procedures, Guthrie still thinks the ceremony is the best in the country. "I think the University has it. "It's one occasion where everyone is happy," he said. "I plan to sit in the president's box and I'm going to enjoy watching it for once."
