How could a Communist revolution in a country as relatively obscure and economically backward as Vietnam bring the U.S. into a war which would have ramifications for American society long after the shooting stopped?

Hess explores history of the Vietnam War

Hess said he wrote the book to be used as a textbook in college classes and for that reason he said a large portion of the book attempts to view the war through the eyes of the Vietnamese, something which has not been done in other recent books about Vietnam.

Currently, he is president of the Society for Historians of American Foreign Relations.

In 1986, he was one of 10 American, French and British scholars invited by the Center for NATO studies to participate in a seminar on the French-American relationship during the Indochina crisis of 1954.

The next year, he was among 15 American, British, Soviet and Chinese scholars to meet in Italy under the auspices of the Henry Luce Foundation and the Rockefeller Foundation to participate in a seminar on East Asian International Relations during the Eisenhower administrations.

In 1990, Hess was named a Distinguished Research Professor by the Board of Trustees, the highest honor a faculty member can receive at Bowling Green.
