After 32 years, Pugh still recalls six-day work week, 10-cent salads

When Monica Pugh, assistant director of food operations, first came to Bowling Green as an undergraduate student in 1967, she remembers working six days a week in the Student Union.

"I thought it was terrible—only having one day off each week," Pugh recalled with a laugh. "That summer, I tried to talk them into having a six-day week: five weekdays and a Friday. I said, 'If we had Fridays off, we'd be back at work before we knew it.'" Pugh's boss agreed to the idea.

In 1970, patron passed a food service agreement to the Student Union to provide Bowling Green students, faculty and staff 10-cent salads three days a week.

"After a year or so, the idea went over so well with students, "Pugh explained. "For 10 cents, you still can get a decent salad in this day and age."

Exchange developed with Japanese university

Bowling Green State University and Saitama University have reached an agreement to begin a student exchange program in the fall of 1993.

It is an important and exciting agreement for our university and our students, Dr. Robert Doak, dean of the College of Education, said.

"We're very pleased to enter into this agreement with Saitama University," Doak said. "This will enable our students to study in Japan and exchange ideas and culture with Japanese students."
Sayani's videotape on recycling becomes a hit with schools, organizations

Raji Sayani, WUSA-TV programming manager, received a phone call from the local School Board about Sayani's videotape on recycling distributed with current issues of the School Board's newsletter, "The Choo-Choo is Yours," a one-hour documentary that was well-received by the students. Sayani, has been sold to organizations and schools for $25 each. "It's the best investment we've ever made," said a school official. The film contains the complete chain of recycling, explaining the process, marketing, and manufacturing. Sayani, who came to the School Board from Bombay in 1989 to begin work on a master's degree in mass communication, said her dream is to work on environmental issues. "I really want to see the environment change," she said. The film, which is aimed at students, is now being shown in schools and community centers. "We really hope to make a difference," said Sayani. Sayani has incorporated a variety of sources into the video, including President Warren G. Harding's speech and the film "Chains of Love." "The message is clear," she said. Sayani's work is shown at the National Film Board of Canada. "It's a love letter to the earth," said Sayani. "We want to show people that recycling is important." PUGH

For the $10, students ended up buying so much money that we were selling tickets at the end of the stunt. So in order to get an extra $5, we sold a $50 ticket and we sold a $10 ticket. We ended up selling about 1,000 tickets. After selling the tickets, we gave back $50 to the people who paid $10 to see the stunt. The money was donated to the Student Support Fund, which helps students pay for books and tuition.

Businesses are learning that a happy home means a happy employee
Big businesses need little encouragement, but small businesses may be dealing with a sizeable change. Many small businesses are finding that the happiness and productivity of their employees are directly linked to the success of the company. One example of this is the case of a small business that implemented a home-based work policy.

The business owner noticed that his employees were more productive and positive when they worked from home. The changes were so significant that the owner decided to make a permanent change. The employees were able to save time and money on commuting, and they were able to work in a more comfortable and productive environment.

This story is not unique. Many small businesses are finding that a happy home means a happy employee. When employees are happy, they are more productive, more committed, and more likely to stay with the company.
