The University's Board of Trustees has approved a new policy that will allow students to receive a portion of their tuition fees back if they choose to withdraw from classes before the end of the semester. The new policy, which was approved at the Feb. 13 meeting of the Board of Trustees, will allow students to receive a refund of up to 75% of their tuition fees if they withdraw from classes before the end of the first 4 weeks of the semester.

The new policy is designed to help students who may need to withdraw from classes for a variety of reasons, such as medical emergencies or personal circumstances. The policy will be retroactive to the start of the current academic year, and will apply to all students enrolled in the University's programs.

The policy is expected to be well-received by students, who have expressed concerns in the past about the high cost of tuition and the difficulty of paying for college.
