From the Field

Dr. Arthur Young is studying American history. He is interested in the history of the federal government and its role in American society. In a talk entitled ‘Beyond the Horizon: The Quest for American Enterprise,' Dr. Young explored the ways in which the federal government has contributed to the growth and development of American industry.

Although he had received permission in New York to present the talk, Dr. Young was not sure that it would be well received. He went to the final lecture at Harvard University, where the talk was scheduled to be given, and was pleasantly surprised by the interest and enthusiasm of the audience. He said that he had been encouraged by the talk, and that he would continue to study the subject of American history.

Young is a member of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and has contributed articles to several historical journals.

ROGOFF, 70,

First-time author

For his doctoral project, Dr. Rogoff studied the presidency of James Knox Polk. He discovered that the presidency of Polk was a turning point in American history, and that it marked the beginning of the modern presidency. He also found that Polk was a skilled politician, and that his policies had a significant impact on the development of American foreign policy.

Rogoff is a professor of economics at the State University of New York at Albany, and is the author of several books on American history.

Rogozina is interested in finding ways to improve the educational programs at the University of Toledo. She said, "We need to make sure that our students are prepared for the workforce, and that they have the skills they need to succeed in their future careers."

Rogozina is a senior teacher in the Department of Business Administration. She has been teaching at the University of Toledo for 20 years, and has a master's degree in business administration from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

She said that she was interested in finding ways to improve the educational programs at the University of Toledo, and that she was always looking for new ways to help her students.
