University offers support to the arts and humanities

To encourage research in the arts and humanities at a time when funding for such programs is dwindling, the University has created a new institute and a special award competition for faculty.

The Institute for the Study of Culture, Society and Human Values has been established to support scholarly and creative projects of high quality in the arts and humanities as well as related areas of humanistic inquiry in the social sciences and education.

Funding for the program comes from a portion of the interest earned on the University's internal endowment. The commitment of that interest towards the arts and humanities was pledged by President Olscamp and approved by the Board of Trustees last August.

The institute will award up to six tenured faculty members release from teaching to pursue scholarly and creative projects and discuss those projects with others. Awarded will continue to receive their regular salaries and the department in which they work will receive compensation to offset their temporary absence.

The first of these Artists and Scholars in Residence awards will be for use during the 1996 spring semester. Faculty members must apply for these by the office. The awards will be announced July 17 and must be accepted by July 24 to provide time to obtain replacement faculty.

During the future, faculty may be allowed leave for up to two semesters at a time.

In addition to offering assistance for research and project development, the institute will also provide an important outreach service to the University community. During their leave, participating faculty will be expected to take part in bi-weekly seminars hosted by the Institute, University forums or some other form of outreach.

The artists and scholars in residence will be asked to share their insights on the nature and importance of the research or creative process in which they are involved and discuss the impact their project will have on future course offerings, content and pedagogy.

"We would like to create a resident community of scholars who are working together, in dialog together and integrating scholarship and teaching about their work," said Dr. Karen Gould, associate professor.

Donated study of contrastive rhetoric seeks a home

Dr. Shirley Ostler, English, recently received a donation of materials which she anticipates will be a rich resource for local and international scholars of written discourse.

The Robert B. Kaplan collection of contrastive rhetoric contains some 350 dissertations, papers, manuscripts and other pieces from international writers on a wide variety of topics related to how people of various languages and cultures organize their writing.

In the mid-1960s, Kaplan, professor emeritus of linguistics at the University of Southern California, studied the written, academic work of non-native English speakers students in an effort to determine why even those whose spoken English was quite good were not succeeding in their written work.

He hypothesized that the way people write is informed by the values of their own cultures, and that when they begin to write in a second language they tend to simply transfer all the characteristics and qualities they have assimilated from their native culture. These include not only use of words but organization and style as well.

Ostler noted that experienced teachers of English as a second language in composition can identify the native country of the writer after reading only a few paragraphs.

These stylistic differences can work to the detriment of students whose professors are unfamiliar with the ways of other cultures, Ostler said.

A Japanese student answering an essay question, for example, would probably develop arguments around the question and not come to the point until the conclusion of their written work. A busy American professor might mistake this for simply transfer of characteristics and qualities they have assimilated from their native culture.

Ostler, who is also coordinator of the master's program in teaching English to speakers of other languages (TESOL), has collaborated with Kaplan since 1982 when she did her graduate work under his supervision at the University of Southern California.

Though the collection is available to faculty and graduate students through Ostler, it does not yet have a niche at the University. Ostler is working on finding the best spot for it and encouraging ongoing contributions to the collection. She also plans to hear from interested Bowling Green faculty who have observed difficulty on the part of their students with writing so the dialog and research on this topic may continue.

University named a ‘leading partner’ of national program

The University has been recognized for its part in a successful national program for involving young people in government service.

The Washington Center is a non-profit, educational organization that provides full-time internships and short-term academic seminars for college students in the nation’s capital. Since its founding in 1975, more than 20,000 students from 750 colleges and universities in the United States and abroad have participated in the program.

Only 20 universities, including Bowling Green, have been designated as “leading partners” of the program and were singled out at an “Honor Roll Dinner” held recently at the National Museum Building in Washington, D.C.

Bernard Swartz, chief executive officer of the Local Corp., and a member of the center’s board of directors, hosted the evening. The guests included Bowling center, University of Michigan, University of Illinois, University of Kentucky, University of Georgia, University of Texas, University of Southern California, and the University of Michigan.

Representing Bowling Green were Dr. Peter M. Hutchison, associate vice president for academic affairs; Dr. Bruce Smith, director of the cooperative education program; and Susan Young, assistant director of the program and the person who coordinates the day-to-day activities of the center program.

Others honored at the dinner included Albion College, Ball State, Rutgers, Villanova and Western Kentucky universities and the University of the Pacific.

Bowling Green has been a participant since the center’s founding and more than 160 Bowling Green students have completed internships in the nation’s capital. Currently, Thomas Fox, a senior political science major from Findlay, is completing a center-sponsored internship at the White House.

Gasp Award

Masked members of Sic Sic, the University’s spirit organization, surprised Sandy Mesmer, of the bursar’s office, with a presentation of the newly established C.J. Gasp award. The award was presented to staff who show that they care about students and colleagues and give 110% to make the University a better place for all. In addition, the following other staff members were recognized: Anne Sains, international student programs; Dave Stanford, cooperative education; Becky McOmber, registrar’s office; Joan Lavine, health services; Paul Lopez, WBGU-TV; Bob Cunningham, affirmative action and disability services; Bob Wadell, capital planning; and Norma Stickle, academic affairs.

Faculty are asked to review draft of conflict of interest policy

In order to remain eligible for federal grants, universities must have a Conflict of Interest/Conflict of Commitment Policy in place by July 1.

A draft policy for Bowling Green is available online at the Sponsored Programs and Research Gopher site. Dr. Louis Katzner, dean of the graduate college, is asking all University faculty to review the draft and provide comments to him or to the Office of Sponsored Programs and Research (SPAR) by April 28.

The SPAR Gopher can be accessed via the “Support Offices” on the University’s World Wide Web home page (http://www.bgsu.edu) or through BGNet.

On BGNet, choose option 7 ("Information Superhighway"); choose option 7 ("Gopher") or option 2 ("Gopher Services in Ohio"); choose option 6 ("College of College and Departments"); and choose option 21 ("Office of Sponsored Programs and Research").

Gould could be the acting director of the Institute for the Study of Culture, Society and Human Values until the search for a director is conducted in the fall. Once chosen, the director will serve a term of three years.

The participants will also be encouraged to share their projects with the outside community through activities such as a presentation to alumni, parents or community members; televised programming to schools, other universities or other communities; meetings with local associations, public school teachers and administrators; or community seminars. The program is designed to complement, not replace other forms of internal support such as faculty leave, Gould said.

Projects will be considered based on the following criteria: relevance to the history of culture and human values; clarity and coherence of the project description; significance of the project for the applicant’s scholarly or creative field; significance of the project for the applicant’s teaching and professional development; likelihood that the project will significantly enhance the students, faculty and community environment of the University; and likelihood that the project will be completed in a timely manner.

Book examines
college policies

Two faculty members examine the impact and implications of federal intervention in higher education in a newly published book, "Student Services in a Changing Federal Climate." Dr. Michael D. Coomes and Dr. Donald D. Gehring, both of higher education and student affairs, are coeditors of the book, which highlights the pros and cons of the recent extensive involvement of the federal government in higher education.

"This is a sourcebook intended to help student affairs administrators understand the nature of federal intervention in student services and to provide them with information about the federal policy process," Coomes said. The book's first chapter, written by Coomes, provides an historical overview of the development of federal efforts in shaping the lives of students and governing the relationship between the institution and students. Important federal initiatives on higher education, from the Survey Ordinance in 1785 to the National and Community Service Act of 1993, are discussed.

According to Coomes, one result of federal intervention is an expansion of opportunities for people to attend college. The result has been a development of a large, well-educated workforce and increased economic competitiveness in our society. Although this positive result is well recognized and praised, federal intervention also has negative ramifications. Gehring, who wrote the chapters on "Protective Policy Laws" and "The Federal University," raises questions on the increasing emphasis on the parental role of college and the continuous erosion of institutional autonomy under the pervasive federal control.

"The government has become a significant player in the creation of policy for individual campuses," Gehring said. "Student affairs administrators must understand the policy process in order to be able to influence it as it develops."

In addition to addressing the enactment of laws, the book also helps readers understand existing federal policy and develop strategies for complying with these mandates. Five different anti-discrimination statutes on higher education and their various implications for student affairs practitioners are examined.

Coomes is an active member of the American College Personnel Association and the National Association of Student Personnel Administrators. Gehring is a senior scholar in the American College Personnel Association. He has previously authored three books in the student affairs field including "The College Student and the Courts" in 1977, and "Administrating College and University Housing: A Legal Perspective." in 1988.

Alumni Teacher Day
Gregory T. Storer, chief executive officer of St. Francis Rehabilitation Hospital and Nursing Home, was one of five graduates of the College of Health and Human Services who returned to the University April 11 to teach a course and lunch with students, faculty and staff.

Central heating system to shut down for five days
The University's central heating system will be inoperative Friday, May 14, through Friday, May 19, for annual repairs. The shut-down will curtail hot water in most buildings and may cause the air conditioning systems to overcool in some spaces.

For further information call 2-2251.

Computer scanning hours extended for final exams
Computer Services will extend its test scanning hours for final exams to include Saturday morning, May 6, from 8 a.m. to noon. Faculty should bring their National Computer System answer sheets to 301 Hayes Hall.

Summer course provides instruction in use of WWW
A special course on the use of the World Wide Web is being offered during the summer sessions to assist department and offices interested in becoming involved in the use of the service. The course will provide the technical and management concepts and skills necessary for developing appropriate materials for the Web and for effectively integrating this activity into the regular workload.

There will be a significant hands-on development component which will provide enrollees the opportunity to develop Web materials for their areas. The courses will be offered for credit or audit during each of the two six-week summer sessions.

For further information or to register for one of the sessions, call Dianne Crowe at 2-8061.

Speed grants are depleted for 1994-95 fiscal year
Norma Stikler, director of academic services, has announced that no funds remain for Speed Grants for the 1994-95 fiscal year.

New grants will be issued only for projects occurring after July 1.

ODK spring initiation scheduled for Friday
The Beta Tau Circle of Omicron Delta Kappa will hold its annual Spring Initiation on Friday, April 28. The day's events will begin with a continental breakfast from 7-8 a.m. in the Alumni Room of the University Union for all faculty, staff and students members. The initiation of new students, faculty, staff and alumni will be held from 4:45 p.m. in Pro writ Chapel, followed by a reception in the Alumni Room of the University Union.

Members are asked to wear their ribbons at all events.

Panel to offer insights on public school funding
Does it seem like Ohio school districts always have a money issue on the ballot? The reason for this phenomenon will be explored in a special luncheon panel discussion sponsored by the Department of Education Administration and Supervision Wednesday (April 26).

"Why Do School Boards Always Need More Money?" will be held from noon to 1 p.m. in 117 Osceola Hall. A question-and-answer session will follow the panel discussion.

Participants will include Dr. William Hall, superintendent of Bowling Green City Schools; Dr. John Bailey, education administration and supervision; and Dr. Larry Busdecker, superintendent of Otsego Schools.

Several grants to support research project
Dr. Elizabeth Heineman, history, recently received several types of funding for her research project called "Standing Alone: Single Women from the Third Reich to the Postwar Germans."

The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded her a summer stipend of $4,750 for a trip to Berlin during which she will examine archival material on East German women's lives during and after the second world war. This is in addition to a faculty research committee basic grant from the University for the project.

Heineman has also been granted a residential fellowship at the Center for European Studies at Harvard University for the 1995-96 school year. "I'll be a full-time researcher there and also take part in seminars," she said. Her husband and daughter will accompany her to Massachusetts, she said, and are looking forward to spending the year in Boston.

Heineman has also been awarded a fellowship from the German Marshall Fund, which she has chosen to defer for one to two years. "I'll wait to see what the University's needs are before deciding how to use it," she said.

Deadline nearing for ERIP participants
Faculty members who plan to retire on the Early Retirement Incentive Plan at the end of 1995 or during the summer of 1996 must make an application by June 30, 1995 in order to be assured consideration.

It is strongly recommended that State Teachers Retirement System members who plan to purchase an out-of-state service credit start that certification process as soon as possible, as it can sometimes take a year or more to complete verification of records.

Contact Norma Stikler in the Office of the Vice President for Academic Affairs (2-2915) for forms or for additional information on the ERIP program or the Supplemental Retirement Program.

Participation in the ERIP is limited to 5 percent of the University's STRS membership, or approximately 50 to 55 persons per year. If more than 5 percent apply, priority will be given to those with the longest University service.

In planning for retirement, many faculty members have questions about where they stand on the "seniority" list at Bowling Green. Following are the approximate numbers of faculty members at the indicated years of service categorized as of the end of the 1994-95 academic year:

- 31 years or more — 17, 30 years — 15, 29 years — 12, 28 years — 16, 27 years — 26, 25 years — 24, 24 years — 19, 23 years — 17, 22 years — 22, 21 years — 11.
