Overview of the BGSU Dance Program:

The Bowling Green State University (BGSU) Dance Program is an academic program housed in the College of Education and Human Development in the School of Human Movement, Sport and Leisure Studies (HMSLS). Currently, the program offers both a major and minor in Dance, with the major allowing students to graduate with a Bachelor of Science in Education.

“The Dance Program curriculum focuses on intellectual, creative, and technical dance endeavors, while offering interdisciplinary experiences in theatre, music and kinesiology. The program emphasizes modern dance and classical ballet as well as a lesser focus on jazz dance. Program options are designed to expand each student’s dance competencies and can be tailored to meet a student’s specific dance interests and talents” (Dance, 2019). Currently, there is no audition required to be part of the program, and the Director and Coordinator of the Dance Program is Colleen Murphy, School of HMSLS Lecturer. The Dance Program offers a minor that is 25-29 credit hours. “It is designed to complement many other BGSU majors and still allow students to graduate in eight or nine semesters” (Dance, 2019). The program is making a shift to the Department of Theatre & Film in the College of Arts and Sciences in the Fall of 2019 – this shift has also removed the major as an option, now only offering a dance minor to BGSU students.

The Dance Program is located in the Eppler Complex on campus, primarily in the Mary Eli Whitney Dance Studio. This space is utilized for classes, rehearsals and performances. The Wolfe Center for the Arts is also a facility utilized by the program. Currently, the Dance program teaches a strong foundation of modern, jazz and ballet, with tap, ballroom, folk and other dance forms offered as supplemental classes. The academic curriculum also strongly emphasizes dance history, dance theory, movement technique, pedagogy and interdisciplinary areas of study.

The process of enrolling in dance classes is similar to any other academic program on campus, and students also have the opportunity to audition to be part of the Dance Repertory Ensemble at the beginning of the academic year. This yearlong commitment includes rehearsals in the fall semester, a prominent performance of the Winter Dance Concert during the spring semester and other opportunities including professional networking, dance conferences, student development and artistic exploration.

The Winter Dance Concert is the most prestigious performance that the Dance program hosts throughout the academic year. Faculty and guest choreography is performed, and this event is the only time the program is permitted to utilize the state-of-the-art facilities in the Wolfe Center for the Arts. The show takes place on the Donnell Theatre stage, and the Wolfe Center staff works the event as well as far as lights, sound, stage, etc.
Situation Analysis:

1. Key external and internal issues and changes that face the organization:

   • Lack of resources and staff members – less dance classes are being offered at the university. Courses are not being promoted or pushed to current students, leading to a poor reputation and program with smaller numbers. This creates smaller scale performances and smaller audiences at those performances, with no resources to promote the program or performances effectively.

   • Program transition – the Dance Program is transitioning to the College of Arts and Sciences under the School of Theatre and Film. This transition will hopefully create a stronger relationship with the performing arts programs on campus and allow for more promotion of the Dance program, but the transition is also affecting the dance curriculum, creating more focus on jazz and musical theatre. This change will be in effect in the fall semester of 2019.

   • Shift in communications to digital world and social media; less printing and more website content and social media used for promotion.

      o BGSU Dance program needs recordings of performances and opportunities and those to be promoted to stay relevant on social media and among other colleges.

      o Digital media allows the Dance Program to communicate with publics and potential audience members online at a lower cost than the cost of printing fliers. Currently, the Winter Dance Concert is only promoted on social media; no flyers are printed.
This external shift creates a desperate need for strong social media management for the Dance Program (a PR intern) to keep the program relevant, recruit for the program and promote the performance opportunities.

2. Risks and Threats:

- Declining numbers – Major no longer offered; only Minor; less classes being offered; less prospective students interested (A threat that could diminish the program)
- Losing teachers – Professors are leaving their positions due to losing classes and not making enough money in their roles (A threat that could diminish the program)
- Losing artistic expression and credentials as a program (Risk)
- Quality of dance and reputation decreasing (Risk)
- Infrastructure/Organization of Dance Program - physically and financially not enough resources to complete projects, pitch to media effectively, or generate awareness of the program, shows and accomplishments (A threat that could diminish the program)
- Conflicting goals - employee vs. employee; employee vs. dancer, professor vs. dancer, dancer vs. program, program vs. general public, program vs. university, professor vs. university (Risk)
- Not enough interest from the community or campus in performances (Risk)
- Not enough publicity in community or on campus for program (Risk)
• Not enough promotion for Winter Dance Concert specifically - social media only utilized very closely to the event, an additional task for the Director who is already busy, no intern to take this work and craft it effectively (Risk)

• Not enough collaboration with university as far as promotion and name recognition (Risk)

• Not enough support from university, financially or emotionally (A threat that could diminish the program)

• Not enough collaboration with other arts organizations on campus – Bravo BG event no longer exists (Risk)

• Winter Dance Concert – low turn out in the audience each year (Risk)

3. Relevant Changes and Trends:

• Economic – BGSU focuses financials on the larger academic programs and athletic programs that receive more promotion and support due to the amount of students and revenue those programs bring in. Dance and the arts in general across the nation – large sums of money are not spent on widespread media coverage or promotion of the arts unless it relates to popular dance TV competitions like Word of Dance, Dancing with the Stars, etc.

  o Continuous cycle: universities do not spend a lot of money because the dance programs and shows do not bring in audiences or traffic to campus, therefore media outlets do not cover them, then people do not attend shows because universities are not dedicating money or time to them.

• Socioeconomic – The widespread success of popular dance television shows has created a buzz around the dance culture, but only as it relates to the entertainment value of dance. College dance programs are much more focused on the artistry, so it does not align and cannot necessarily benefit from the popularity that entertainment and commercial dance has gained in today's society.

- This popularity may lead to increased interest in dance as a whole, but more so related to university dance teams or dance organizations, not necessarily the academic dance programs around the country. Audiences want to see tricks and jaw-dropping moves and are not necessarily inherently interested in the art of dance unless they intrinsically and personally appreciate art.

4. Environmental Impact:

The BGSU Dance Program impacts its environment through creating a performing arts environment on campus. This performing arts environment is not capitalized on enough in the BGSU community. The social media and communications efforts include social media and local newspapers and photographers specifically relating to their Winter Dance Concert, but not enough communication is done in general for the Dance Program at BGSU, accomplishments of students or ways the program is relevant in the community and around the country. Many students have created dance works on national social issues, and these should be shared and spread. Additionally, there are other related organizations on campus such as the BGSU
Dance Team, BGSU University Dance Alliance, Swing Society, Element Dance Team, Falconette’s and other health and exercise related organizations that could be collaborative to impact the environment.

5. Biggest Success:

According to the Dance Program Director, Colleen Murphy, the program’s biggest success is producing strong dancers, movers and thinkers who go out and do good in the world. She enjoys the small size of the BGSU Dance Program and feels it makes the program inclusive. She also believes having a small program allows them to cater to the needs of each individual student instead of trying to make everyone “dance the exact same way or follow the same career path”. Colleen also enjoys the strong connection with alumni and knows that many of the opportunities they receive after graduation comes through the connections and experiences within the Dance Program. She believes that Dance makes every student’s college experience happier, healthier and more meaningful.
Opportunity Statement:

This campaign will generate greater awareness of the BGSU Dance Program and its performances and increase attendance at performing arts events at BGSU. Through inventive social and multi-media efforts, innovative collaboration with community and campus partners, and interactive updates to the Dance Program promotional efforts, this campaign will target and reach BGSU students, faculty and staff, Wood County community members, prospective BGSU students, local media and K-12 students in Wood and Lucas County. This proposal will mold a declining program into a thriving and engaging dance environment at BGSU.
Secondary Research:

Focusing on art patronage and arts management, Clopton et al. explore how audiences can be segmented based on preferences and how their characteristics then can be analyzed to create a customer-centered marketing plan. For example, the authors found that segment 3 within their study appreciates visual and performing arts, including dance, and that most of the audience members in this segment have high income, high education and high appreciation for the arts.

What this means: These characteristics inform me that the people attending performing arts events, like the Winter Dance Concert at BGSU, are most likely already invested and interested in the art – they do not need convincing. The research Clopton et al. conducted helped me learn about the segments less inclined to attend performances and how to create a promotional plan based on their characteristics that better markets to them and helps them understand how dance performance can be beneficial for them.

Juilliard has one of the top five dance programs in the country, some sites rank it as number one, and their website reflects the prestige and class of their program. Photographs on the site are high quality and well designed, the site is easy to navigate and user-friendly, dance faculty and their credentials are highlighted, and important events (like performances) are promoted. Altering and updating the website design and content for the BGSU Dance Program is something I would like to include in my promotional campaign as a way to keep community and campus members engaged. This way the audiences can still interact with the program before and after performances, and information about events can be more clearly communicated to its publics, hopefully driving larger attendance at the performances and Winter Dance Concert specifically.

What this means: I used the Juilliard website for inspiration to model some of the changes I wanted to make to the BGSU Dance Program website. As one of the top five dance programs in the country, Juilliard’s promotion is strong, effective and moves people to action and will be a useful example to follow when working on the BGSU Dance website.

Point Park University is another one of the top ten dance programs in the country. One resource in particular that caught my eye on their website was a video highlighting the performances, classes and opportunities dancers will take part in as a dance major at Point Park University. I would love to create a multi-media piece that is reflective of what the Winter Dance Concert is at BGSU – this way audience members can experience a piece of the show before they attend, and due to the nature of social media, awareness of the show will increase as well with the video being shared.

This source highlights an effective and user-friendly way of promoting events. The Washington Center is a prominent and well-known venue around the country, and they promote events on their website in a succinct and efficient manner. You can purchase tickets straight from the website and learn more about the specific show you are clicking on.

What this means: This source will be useful in navigating the redesign of the BGSU Dance Program website – being able to purchase tickets online will streamline the process, making it more convenient and easy for all audiences to learn about the Winter Dance Concert and make it to the performance.

Markusen and Brown focus on two very important aspects to performing arts – audience participation and venue space. Their research concluded that the distance between performers and the audience is too vast – audience members want to share in the artistic expression. Additionally, the venue and space the performance takes place in is strongly correlated to the mood of the audience and how much they enjoy the performance. Venues can be “cold” or they can be “friendly” to audience members.

What this means: The audience research conducted by Markusen and Brown was helpful to me in finding new ways I could allow the audience to participate more in the Winter Dance Concert. The participation may not occur physically, as the Winter Dance Concert takes place in the Wolfe Center on campus, and we do not have much control over how to utilize the stage. Instead, though, the participation can take place through my public relations promotional efforts with community partners, the structure of the show, etc. Slightly closing the gap between audience and performers and allowing the audience to feel involved in the performance may create a much stronger desire for the public to attend BGSU Dance Program events.

Misirhiralall explores the way dance is portrayed in the media in the context of religious dances, dance in education, self-development and social classes. The article analyzes dance as cultivation of creativity within these contexts and whether or not dance is more valuable as subject matter or as an independent studio study. One specific point of interest is how dance is utilized within liberal arts education at universities like Yale and Harvard.

What this means: This article will be useful in analyzing the way dance is perceived by the public as I go about creating my public relations campaign for the Winter Dance Concert. I can expand on the analysis in this article and use the media portrayal to create a proposal that reflects the issues/debates in the media.

The Tisch Dance Program is one of the top university dance programs in the country, so similarly to my reasoning behind utilizing the Juilliard website, modeling aspects from the Tisch Dance website for the BGSU Dance website will be very beneficial.

What this means: The modifications I am looking to make on the BGSU Dance website focus on creating an artistic, engaging and informative atmosphere for BGSU Dance, which I think the Tisch Dance site effectively achieves through design, layout and copy. I also think the dance events are heavily and efficiently promoted, which is something I am striving to incorporate into BGSU Dance Program promotion.

The Ohio State University Dance Program is in the top twenty-five programs in the nation, and this source emphasizes their focus on community and campus partners. Because the BGSU Winter Dance Concert promotional plan will encompass community and campus partnerships, this research allows me to get an idea of some of the related fields that could serve as partnerships for BGSU Dance. Ohio State Dance holds partnerships with The Dance Notation Bureau Extension for Education and Research, The Ohio State University Sports Medicine & Rehabilitation’s Performing Arts Medicine team, and The Motion Lab with the Advanced Computing Center for the Arts and Design.

What this means: The fields of OSU’s partnerships are all related to dance, but serve a greater purpose when combined with the Ohio State Dance Department, which is useful in finding resources in Bowling Green and on campus that are similar and would be effective partnerships with the BGSU Dance Program.

Social media is a prominent part of a public relations campaign; so investigating how one of the top ten dance programs in the country runs their social media will be beneficial to come up with innovative yet effective ideas for the BGSU Dance social media pages. Point Park utilizes graphics and Instagram stories for their posts, which is an interesting concept I have not seen from many other programs.

What this means: I want to mold their concept to craft original social media pieces to promote the Winter Dance Concert. Social media has a huge audience reach and can be spread quickly, and Point Park utilizes their social media to promote their shows and events in a timely and aesthetically pleasing form, which will be included in the BGSU Winter Dance Concert promotional plan.

This source is another example of how community partners can be a successful form of engagement with an organization’s publics and can help to positively influence the promotion of events. Juilliard Dance students complete community service projects and programs in New York. These programs spread awareness of the Juilliard Dance Program as well as provide dance experiences for different New York communities.

What this means: Not only are these partnerships beneficial to Juilliard Dance in the context of branding and reputation, it also spreads awareness so that more community members show up to their performances. I will be able to use these examples to model the community partnerships I would like to include in my BGSU Winter Dance Concert promotional campaign.

Putler and Lele take a more business-analytical approach to performing arts in their research. They present a framework to model ticket sales to performing arts events similar to the Winter Dance Concert at BGSU. The ticket model they utilize in their study strongly influences and reflects the marketing efforts to sell tickets. Knowing the projected ticket sales allows the promotional team to be aware of which performances may require greater efforts on their end.

What this means: I can utilize this research in my own promotional efforts as I prepare my promotional plan for the Winter Dance Concert. Predicting how many tickets the concert will sell allows me to alter and adapt my public relations proposal based on the results, promoting the show to the largest audience possible.
Rentner, T., Dr. (n.d.). Sports PR Campaign Proposal Guidelines[Word Doc].

This source from Dr. Rentner outlines in detail what a sample public relations proposal looks like including research, situation analysis, creating an opportunity statement and identifying target audiences. The background knowledge of the proposal then allows the PR professional to create goals, objectives, strategies and tactics, develop key messages and also create a basic timeline to implement the proposal.

What this means: This source served as a solid foundation for me to follow as I created the PR proposal for the BGSU Winter Dance Concert including sample pieces and structure of the campaign in general.

An interview with Scott Stoner, Associate Director of Education of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, this resource delves into the topic of school and community partnerships within the performing arts and how partnerships can benefit the arts community. Stoner emphasizes the grassroots level of partnerships including face-to-face interaction and personal connections, allowing partnerships to express the core values of each organization. Additionally, these personal interactions can lead to word of mouth promotion and marketing efforts for the performing arts as well. Stone also notes the importance of making sure an organization has leadership in place to conduct the tasks necessary of forming a community partnership.

What this means: This research will be very useful to me in developing a public relations campaign for the Winter Dance Concert at BGSU, as I plan on including community and campus partnerships in my promotional plan.

This PowerPoint file from Pearson Education outlines the basic web and digital media that is prevalent to public relations majors. Describing traditional media, mobile media, social media, podcasts, blogs and the Internet in general, this resource gives me information on the basic usage of these mediums and how to utilize them in a promotional manner.

What this means: The information will be most useful in updating BGSU Dance website content and using digital media promotional efforts for the Winter Dance Concert. This background knowledge on the mediums will allow me to effectively create the promotional pieces.
As one of the top five dance programs in the country, Juilliard’s social media can serve as a solid example to model within the BGSU Winter Dance Concert promotional campaign. Specifically, Juilliard Dance utilizes the main Juilliard social media accounts. So rather than simply posting on the Juilliard Dance social media accounts, they make sure to have a relationship with the Marketing and Communication Department of The Juilliard School as a whole, so that the dance events and performances can be posted and featured. The main social media accounts of universities typically reach a larger quantity and broader range of students, community members and people in general.

What this means: It would be very useful to model a social media campaign for the Winter Dance Concert off of Juilliard’s example and form a connection with the BGSU Marketing and Communication Department. Through this connection, the dance program performances can be promoted on a larger scale and more likely to reach a larger audience on the BGSU Dance social media accounts.

This source highlights the top ten dance colleges in the United States and what they have in common; it also showcases what makes each university program special. For instance, it highlights building relationships, community partnerships and collaborating with music programs, high schools in the area, etc. The common theme was that each prestigious program had a strong connection with the community leading to a strong reputation and prestige for their program.

TSA is a charter school in Toledo, OH focused on the performing arts; also known as Toledo School for the Arts. Their website is polished, fun, exciting and easy to use. Their social media accounts are the focal point of the page, which is something I would like to incorporate into the BGSU Winter Dance Concert social media campaign, and they create events on Facebook for their performances that audience members can actually respond to. I believe the strong social media push and personal connection of inviting someone to the Facebook event pushes the public to attend performances and feel more engaged with the performers at the events.

What this means: This source helped me in creating strategies and tactics for my PR proposal and how to go about creating a strong reputation and loyal following for the BGSU Dance Program. I discovered that the arts environment at BGSU needs to be emphasized, and that there is a disconnect between other prestigious programs on campus and the Dance Program. We need to build upon one another, and this was utilized in my proposal.

In this article, Van Dyke touches on the decreasing amount of audience members that dance performances are facing, while the number of employed dancers in the United States is increasing. She also explores the reasons why dance audiences may be diminishing, and she concludes that insufficient publicity is a potential cause.

What this means: In the BGSU Winter Dance Concert promotional plan, creating Facebook events would be a very effective way to spread awareness to students and the surrounding community, and it would also allow others to continue the cycle of promoting and sharing the event online.
What this means: Insufficient publicity is the problem that the BGSU Dance Program faces, and this article will be useful to me as I navigate the most effective way to promote the Winter Dance Concert. Drawing on her conclusions about how to analyze dance audiences differently will help me to develop the best resource for the dance program and gain more audience members.
Primary Research: Interviews

Colleen Murphy, Director of the Dance Program and School of HMSLS Lecturer:

In talking with Colleen Murphy about the current climate of the Dance Program at BGSU, she seemed optimistic. With the program transitioning to the College of Arts and Sciences under the Theatre and Film (T&F) Department, her understanding is that the program will be officially transitioned by Fall 2019. Dance classes will still be held in Eppler, so it is more of an academic move than a physical move to the Wolfe Center. She hopes this transition will lead to better promotion of the Dance Program events and performances on campus and a better relationship in general with T&F and the Arts on campus.

Her favorite part of the Dance Program on campus is the close-knit atmosphere. “I like our small program. We are inclusive, and we cater to each student instead of trying to make everyone dance the exact same way or follow the same career path.” She truly believes the BGSU Dance Program produces strong dancers, movers and thinkers who go on to do good in the world. She values the connection the program holds with alumni and how much networking in the program has led to great opportunities and connections for these dancers – she enjoys when alumni come back to visit. She inherently believes that dance makes life better and that the BGSU Dance Program makes students’ college experiences happier, healthier and more meaningful.

Autumn White, Senior Dance Minor:

Autumn White is a graduating Dance Minor on campus and part of the BGSU Dance Program. She has performed in several BGSU Dance Program productions as well as been involved in Dance organizations on campus like University Dance Alliance. Autumn believes that the BGSU Dance Program has taught her more than just the technical aspects of dance, and she values the education she received in dance history, theory, famous choreographers, etc. She loves learning from multiple professors with different movement specialties, and she believes the performance opportunities are great ways to get involved in the program, meet new people, work closely with faculty and gain experience onstage.

As far as the transition to T&F, Autumn is confident that the move will be beneficial for the program and allow more students the opportunity to dance. However, she does not believe that the dance curriculum should focus only on musical theatre classes when the move is made. She believes that T&F students should still learn terminology, technique, etc. to be prepared for auditions. She hopes the Dance Program will be permitted to utilize the Wolfe Center space more often after this transition.

From a promotional standpoint, she did not see much promotion of the Winter Dance Concert on social media or elsewhere. “Overall, the Dance Program could do a better job of promoting classes and shows.” She was aware of multiple master class dancers and choreographers that came to campus after performing at the Stranahan Theater in Toledo, and she thinks that the Dance Program should capitalize on similar events.

Publics and Target Audiences

1. BGSU Students, Faculty and Staff: BGSU Students, faculty and staff are the BGSU population and the audience we want to target to increase their awareness of the BGSU Dance Program, their performances and the general performing arts environment at BGSU. Specifically, we want to target on-campus organizations related to the arts and students involved in the performing arts already on campus. Increasing engagement with this audience will lead to higher attendance at performances, more publicity for the Dance Program and a shifted attitude about the BGSU Dance Program on campus.

2. Wood County Community Members: This campaign is also targeting Wood County community members in an attempt to increase engagement with them, increase their awareness of the BGSU Dance Program and lead to higher community member attendance at performances. We especially want to focus on targeting young dancers, ages 8-18, and their families, as well as community members involved in the arts in other ways in the community such as the Black Swamp Arts Festival participants, open-mic night participants, dance studio owners and teachers, etc. Targeting this audience will increase awareness of the Dance Program at BGSU and how they can get involved as well as increase their attendance at performances. Additionally, we are targeting the community to increase collaboration with off-campus community businesses and organizations. More Bowling Green community members will attend the performances because of the connections within the community partners. This campaign can also (mutually) benefit these partners by increasing their participation/business through the publicity they gain at the performances/on social media.

3. Prospective BGSU Students: We want to target prospective students to continue growing the BGSU Dance Program and widening the reach of the program. Widening the reach of the program leads to larger turnout at their performances. The more dancers there are in the program, the wider the reach and more support there is at each performance. Because of the transition of the program to T&F, this is the perfect time to rebrand the BGSU Dance Program for incoming students.

4. K-12 Students in Wood and Lucas Counties: We want to target young students to increase their knowledge and awareness of the arts culture at BGSU at a young age. Particularly young dancers (ages 8-18) and their families in the community can learn what the BGSU Dance Program has to offer and how they can continue to stay involved through participation, attendance and donations. This can lead to spreading information through word of mouth and increasing awareness of the Dance Program at BGSU. It can also lead to increased attendance at performances from community members. This will also contribute to growing the Dance Program and sparking interest in Dance at BGSU for these children at a young age.

5. Local Media: We want to target local media to gain more coverage for the BGSU Dance Program. We want to increase awareness, attendance and participation at performances and events and raise awareness about the performing arts environment on campus through media coverage, media partners and more publicity overall.
Planning: Goals and Objectives

Goal #1: To increase awareness and general knowledge of the BGSU Dance Program performances and mission during the 2019-2020 academic year.

Objective #3: To increase communication efforts to reach prospective students interested in dance at BGSU by 5 percent by the end of the 2019-2020 academic year.

Goal #2: To raise audience turnout and attendance at the BGSU Dance Program Winter Dance Concert and other performances during the 2019-2020 academic year.

Objective #1: To raise turnout at BGSU Dance Program Winter Dance Concert by 8 percent by the end of the 2019-2020 academic year.

Objective #1: To increase community partnerships by 10 percent by the end of the 2019-2020 academic year.
Objective #2: To increase on-campus partnerships by 10 percent by the end of the 2019-2020 academic year.

Objective #3: To increase collaboration and communication with local media by 5 percent by the end of the 2019-2020 academic year.

| Establish a PR Internship for the Dance Program | 1: Craft a PR Internship Job Description and List of Duties.
2: Connect with Dr. Terry Rentner and the Department of Journalism and Public Relations to establish the internship and spread the word.
3: Post on BGSU’s student job networking site, Handshake.
4: Publicize the job posting.
5: Hire and train the new intern. | See Appendix A for PR Intern Job Description and Duties

Build Relationships and Collaborations

| Local Media | 1: Craft a media list that contains all contacts to reach out (Intern).
2: Establish connections with individuals at these media outlets to create rapport and publicize the program more effectively.
3: Search for local media in Wood and Lucas County in a variety of different channels (print, TV, radio, magazine, social media, etc.).
4: Find relevant local media in areas with performing arts schools or where dance studios prominently located. | The Intern will utilize these contacts and connections to send press releases and other communication to promote performances on campus, like the Winter Dance Concert, and other Dance Program successes/newsworthy events.
Dance lends itself to visual aids and visual aesthetics, so the intern will include multimedia aspects to the communication when relevant. The intern can also inform the media that they are welcome to come to rehearsals and performances and take their own photos |
Capitalize on newsworthy events to make sure the essence and value of the Dance Program is captured and presented to the community through local media.

For example: If Mental Health were the theme of the Winter Dance Concert one year, the Counseling Center, Rec and Wellness, Psychology Department and other student organizations that spread positivity could set up tables and booths in the lobby of the Wolfe Center during the performance, spreading their messaging and giving away samples, etc. Additionally, the dances would all relate to mental health in some way. This allows the partners to increase promotion and creates increased turnout in attendance for the concert because of the partnerships involved. Finally, NAMI (National Alliance for Mental Illness) could receive ¼ of the proceeds of ticket sales (or donations from campus and community partners) from the Winter Dance Concert.

See Appendix G for sample flyer for the Winter Dance Concert.

Develop a Focus Group and Conduct Research about Awareness and Attitudes Toward BGSU Dance Program

1: Create a focus group survey on campus before the academic year begins that measures the attitudes and awareness of students and faculty toward the BGSU Dance Program and previous attendance of this audience at performances.

2: To create a focus group survey off campus before the season begins that measures the attitudes and awareness of Wood and Lucas counties community members toward the BGSU Dance Program and previous attendance of this audience at performances.

Focus group survey will contain questions such as: “Are you aware there is a Dance Program at BGSU?” “How often do you attend Dance Program performances?” “How often do you see BGSU Dance Program performances and where?” “What is your general attitude toward the BGSU Dance Program?”
Key Messages:

- The BGSU Dance Program is small but mighty, accomplished in many ways and values performance and the arts in the college experience.
- The BGSU Dance Program produces accomplished alumni and brings great performing arts connections BGSU.
- The BGSU Dance Program hosts an impactful and entertaining Winter Dance Concert each year during the Spring Semester.
- Performances are exciting, engaging and impactful.
- The BGSU Dance Program collaborates on and off campus and has a large and varied network across BGSU and Wood/Lucas Counties.
- Dance can be relevant and relatable to all.
Budget

As part of the 2018 Homecoming Court, I raised $1,700 for the BGSU Dance Program through donations. The program has not yet utilized this money, so in creating this campaign, I based my strategies and tactics off of a budget of an amount of $1,700 should any of the tactics incur costs. With most of strategies and tactics relating to communication efforts, this campaign does not cost much at all. The only tactics in which budget may come into play would be printing costs and the Winter Dance Concert Performance updates as far as tables, booths, etc.

- Printing Flyers – May potentially be free based on Dance Program office space (I know programs for shows are printed in bulk in Eppler, so this may be an option for flyers, depending on printing options (color, etc.) If not available in Eppler, printing through BGSU Print, Copy and Mail: 1,000 fliers total = $250 (Based on previous purchase of 1,000 8.5 x 11 colored, medium weight, matte finish fliers); so the cost to print 300 Winter Dance Concert flyers would be under $250.

- Winter Dance Concert Updates – Additionally, there may be a cost to rent tables for the on and off campus partnerships to set up their booths and signs. These tables would most likely have to be rented from an external business by the Dance Program. At Great Lakes Rental, 8 rectangular tables would cost a total of $136 for 2-days of use.

  https://www.greatlakesparty.com/equipment.asp?action=category&category=12&key=TABLE6BAN

These prices keep us well below the $1,700 budget with room to continue coming up with innovative events and improving the Eppler facility.

- Evaluate successes in reaching goals and objectives of this campaign through post-campaign focus group research and attendance at performances Evaluation

Awareness and Attitude Change: Can be measured by focus group research survey done before the academic year and another focus group research survey conducted after the academic year (or towards the end of the year after the Winter Dance Concert). One conducted with BGSU students, faculty and staff as well as an additional focus group of members of the Wood/Lucas counties community members. This survey will measure the awareness of the target audiences about the BGSU Dance Program, performances and general attitudes and awareness relating to the BGSU Dance Program—we would measure the results of the post-campaign surveys compared to the pre-campaign surveys to see if we met our objective of increasing awareness by 8 percent among BGSU students, faculty and staff and 5 percent among the Wood and Lucas counties community, as well as analyzing if there was any change in the attitudes toward the program after the campaign was implemented throughout the academic year.

Knowledge: We could also measure the amount of knowledge our target audience’s have about the BGSU Dance Program based on social media and website analytics. Measuring engagements and what audiences are searching for and clicking on online will show us if the audiences’ focuses have shifted at all toward the performances/events put on by the Dance Program. We would also be able to tell if audiences are interested in the giveaways, social media series and success stories posted. These analytics would be used to measure if we met our objective of raising social media engagement by 20 percent. Additionally, we can analyze how many articles/stories in local media related to the Dance Program by the end of the year to analyze if our reach grew and if we met our objective of increasing communication with local media by 5 percent.

Behavioral Change: Can be measured by comparing the quantitative attendance of audience members at the 2020 Dance Concert compared to 2019 attendance. We can also compare number of campus and community partnerships at the 2020 event compared to last year as well as how many prospective students reach out/are interested/declare dance minors in the 2019-2020 academic year. We can use these quantitative values to measure if we met our objectives of raising turnout at the Winter Dance concert by 8 percent, increasing community and campus partners by 10 percent and increasing communication efforts to reach prospective students by 5 percent.
