Visions in Leisure and Business

Volume 1 | Issue 4

1983

Introduction: World's Fair

Visions Editors

Follow this and additional works at: https://scholarworks.bgsu.edu/visions

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Human Movement, Sport and Leisure Studies at ScholarWorks@BGSU. It has been accepted for inclusion in Visions in Leisure and Business by an authorized editor of ScholarWorks@BGSU.
There are two different perspectives in the planning and implementation process that occur in the development of an event as large as the World’s Fair. One is from the inside, which includes those involved in base operations and those outside, who are involved in providing goods and services or are the clients. The most important perspective in the following presentation is noting the processes used to develop the World’s Fair proposal through implementation. The first of these processes is based upon a community’s ability to sell its uniqueness and convince an agency that they have the expertise and resources to stage such an event. The first competency needed is sales and marketing because at that stage the World’s Fair is only an idea. The processes in the second phase from an insider’s viewpoint is being able to work with people. The skills involved here are more than public relations but involves organizing and arranging tremendous amounts of information. Effective organizational structures are essential for implementing a successful operation.