The voice of musical arts

Virginia Nungester to end 31-year University career

"Going Home: More Musical Arts Center.

In just two days the woman who has greeted callers to the music program nearly every day for 27 years will be answering her home telephone instead of her office number. Her voice and face are familiar to thousands of University students, faculty and staff.

Nungester will leave the Music Education Department March 31 after 25 years of service. She began working at the department as a secretary in 1972 when Kennedy reorganized the entire program. She was promoted to assistant professor in 1974 and to full professor in 1980.

"It's a good time to leave," Nungester said recently. "My family and I have been making a decision to spend more time at home. What she does, in fact, have the highest accumulated load of year leave of all the music department professors on campus."

She would come to work in the morning, spend the days and then face the evenings and the last five go home in the evening.

"The family and I thought of all the outstanding contributions to the music program over the years, and the next five years will be spent with past and present students and faculty.

She has a fantastic memory and has been extremely helpful to faculty and students, and she will personally miss her enthusiasm and faithful Christian witness, and overall she is a familiar, hard, devoted employee who served everybody."

Nungester is sorting with reluctance, acknowledgment that her husband likely is the one who really did the work.

"Many of the students, my staff, and my assistant have been challenged, but with major contributions, they have helped her during this time.

"I'm leaving because of the age issue, and I'm leaving because of the need for more time at home."

New administrators are taking over with a strong background in the department and being in the process of moving forward."

Virginia Nungester has retired with some measure of success.

In the final year of her career, Nungester said, she is younger and is looking forward to spending more time with her family.

The recent death of Dr. Grover Leader of the University faculty, a distinguished scholar and teacher, has created a sense of loss and melancholy. The study committee formed by the Board of Trustees in 1961 to investigate the faculty charter would not be subject to periodic review made with current caring of the American Association of University Professors’ principles of academic freedom and free speech. Because of the recent death of Dr. Leader, the elementary charter process has been suspended.

The recent death of Dr. Leader has left a void in the world of academia. His contributions to the field of education and his dedication to the University community will be sorely missed. The faculty and staff of the University are mourning his loss and expressing their deepest condolences to his family and loved ones.

New system in place

Faculty play greater role in budget planning

New budgeting procedures which incorporate input from the academic community have been implemented at the University of Michigan this year. The faculty is now part of committees that are charged with formulating both the operating and capital budgets. The committee that formulates the annual budget will have representatives from the faculty and academic units. These representatives will sit on the committee along with members of the day-to-day administration of the University, including personnel budgets. Each department will be required to establish a budget committee that will set priorities within the area and devise a three-year operating plan which includes annual staffing and operating needs.

According to the Faculty Operating Budget Committee (FOBC), the budget will be prepared by the faculty and departmental administration. It will be presented to the FOBC which will set a budget for each department. The FOBC will then present its budget to the senate, and the senate will review the recommendations of the FOBC and make them into a three-year plan for the college or autonomous school. Upon approval by the dean or the director, the proposed college budget plan will be forwarded to the University Budget Committee (UBC) and the Senate Faculty Budget Senate Town Hall, University Center, April 12 (2-0151).

The UBC will then approve the plan or recommend changes to the plan to the Board of Trustees.
