PLD MEET FOR PARKING: A variety of workshops, seminars, meetings and other events will be held in the classroom on campus during the month of May. Although the parking lot is being used for the purposes of the Spring Pathways and UO-ART, it is also being used for the purpose of conference parking. Because the expected heavy demand for visitor parking during the next several weeks, persons planning events that will bring large, or even modest, crowds should ensure that there is sufficient parking and traffic access.

The University reserves some classroom areas and the most suitable parking locations, and if necessary, parking permits and other information. If we lose about these events in advance, we can better coordinate the parking. Nothing discourages visitors more than arriving on campus and finding that there is no place to park. Our office can help make these visits a pleasure; we do not have a problem with this. The parking area is available to the public.

Social work volunteers help keep agencies going

It has been a rather vicious cycle. The current economic recession has placed a burden on the social service agencies and the other social service agencies. And, to a certain degree, the workers are being cut off. Students are being offered more part-time work in the areas of social work and in the communities.

However, help is needed to keep the agencies operating. By volunteering both time and skills, students are able to help contribute to the agencies. The recent trend of students doing volunteer work in social agencies is a trend that is going to continue.

The volunteers include students in the social work program and in other areas. They are required to spend a minimum number of hours, ranging from 30 to 40, during their college career.

During the current year, 81 students, as part of their course requirements, have contributed nearly 7,000 hours of volunteer service in area social service agencies. They have become aware of the value of volunteer work and have been able to use the material with historical, ethical, and other perspectives.

The course is offered with graduate, undergraduate, and non-credit options and is supported by Dr. William E. McCall. The course is offered with the natural and social sciences departments at the Firelands campus. All three instructors bring both academic expertise and personal experience to the students. Their exposure to the material with historical, ethical, and other perspectives.

Firelands course on 'hotspots' is hot topic in the media

A new political science course at Firelands College has received a lot of attention recently because of extensive media coverage about the unique offering.

"Terrorism," is offered for students who think they want to be "terrorists." The course is offered with the natural and social sciences departments at the Firelands campus. All three instructors bring both academic expertise and personal experience to the students. Their exposure to the material with historical, ethical, and other perspectives.

It's not too late. Tickets still remain for Sunday's exhibit 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center, 880 University Blvd., Bowling Green. The reception for the "Women and Changing Society: A Cultural History II" exhibit will be held in the Fine Arts Center at 880 University Blvd., Bowling Green, from 3 to 5 p.m.

Library shuttle to run through summer

Beginning in May, the Gutenberg Express shuttle service offered by the University libraries will be available to transports various types of books, as well as library materials, from the Kent State University Library to the University of Toledo in 60 minutes. Ohio during the summer as well as the fall. The summer shuttle service will also be available Mondays through Thursdays and will make one run each week.

The cost of a one-way ticket is $5. The van departs from the east end of Anderson Arena in parking lot 14, adjacent to the Fine Arts Center, at 8:40 a.m. at stops at the Medical College at 8:50 a.m., and returns to Bowling Green at 12:40 p.m. The van will be purchased at the main circulation desk of both the Kent State University and the Bowling Green State University libraries.
Social work volunteers help keep agencies going

It has been a rather vicious cycle. The current economic recession has placed a burden on the soup kitchens, emergency centers, and other social service agencies. And, at the same time the need for such services is escalating, human service agency budgets are being cut. Students, hoping to ease the strain on these agencies, by volunteering both their time and financial support. According to Dr. Mary Edwards, dean of the College of Social Science and Community Service, the volunteers include students in BGSU's social work program as well as community volunteers who have contributed a number of hours, or in some cases, full-time work during their college career.

During the current year, 81 students, as part of our course requirements, have contributed nearly 7,000 hours of volunteer service in area agencies. The students have helped mentally handicapped children and adults, Lutheran Social Services centers and programs for abused families.

In addition, 32 senior social work students have volunteered 15,360 hours while doing their required internships in agencies in Bowling Green. These students spend a significant part of their time working for the agencies as the Children's Resource Center, the Children's Mental Health Center, Community Counseling Services, alcohol and drug counseling centers, Toledo Community College, Elyria Community College, and University Hospitals of Cleveland, Lorain County Welfare Department, Community Counseling Services, and Bowling Green Menor House, the Wood County Mental Health, young Children's Center and others in the northwest area. The students receive an additional 15 hours of service credit for this work. They have been able to maintain an adequate level of service to these agencies despite the budget reductions with the help of volunteerism. The noted that a conservative estimate of the social work students' contribution to these agencies this year, assuming that all students are paid at federal minimum wage, would be $100,000.

Reagan appoints Paul to UN commission

Dr. Ellen Frankel Paul, associate professor of political science at the University of Colorado at Boulder and at Miami University, has been appointed by President Reagan to the United Nations Commission on Social Development. The commission meets in Vienna and reports directly to the Economic and Social Council, one of the main organs of the United Nations. The commission is authorized to conduct studies and to formulate policy recommendations for national governments and international organizations and to ensure the implementation of the United Nations' social development goals.

The appointment of Dr. Paul, who is a specialist in the study of the United States and the United Nations, is another example of President Reagan's commitment to the United Nations and its purposes. Dr. Paul is the only American woman to have been appointed to the commission, and she is the first woman to represent the United States at the commission.

The event will take place in the evening, and the ngân sách will provide transportation for the attendees. The cost of a ticket is $260, and the tickets can be purchased at the box office or online. The event will be open to the public, and all interested persons are encouraged to attend.

Firelands course on 'hotspots' is hot topic in the media

A new political science course at Firelands College has received a lot of attention recently because it is the first course in the region to offer a comprehensive study of the political trends that are shaping the world. The course, taught by Dr. Dr. John B. Gruber, a professor of political science at Bowling Green State University, will cover the political issues that are most likely to occur in the near future, including the Middle East, Europe, and Asia. The course will be offered in the Fall 2018 semester and will meet the requirements for the political science major at Bowling Green State University.

Dr. Emmanuel Muego (right), natural and social sciences, Firelands, recently met the House of Representatives, the President's Cabinet, and the Congress of the United States. During his visit, he addressed the importance of political science and social science education, emphasizing the need for a stronger focus on civic engagement and public service.

Dr. Aida Tomah, a retired professor of political science at the University of Illinois at Chicago, recently discussed the political trends that are shaping the world, including the rise of populism and nationalism, the decline of democratic institutions, and the rise of authoritarian regimes. She emphasized the importance of understanding these trends and the need for political scientists to engage with policymakers and the public to promote democratic governance and social justice.

Libby shuttle to run through summer

Beginning in May, the Gutenberg Express shuttle service offered by the University library will be available to transport students and faculty to and from the University of Tübingen and the University of Würzburg, Germany. The summer shuttle service will be available Mondays through Thursdays and will make two runs each day. The cost of a one-way ticket is $15. The shuttle departs from the eastern end of Anderson Arena in Park 14, adjacent to the centerline parking lot, at 8:40 a.m. and stops at the following locations: the University of Würzburg, the University of Tübingen, and the University of Heidelberg. The shuttle service will continue through the summer and will return each day to the centerline parking lot. The shuttle is available for purchase at the university's website.
Admissions plan involves recruitment network

The enrollment decline of the 1980s is a dilemma facing the entire nation's colleges and universities. A recent study by the Ohio Association of Universities and Colleges found that only 68 percent of all college-going students in Ohio completed their degrees within four years. To combat this problem, the University of Oregon has implemented an admissions plan that includes identifying and targeting potential students with an 80 percent chance of completing their degree within four years. The plan also aims to recruit and retain students who contribute positively to the campus community.

The admission plan includes a number of strategies to identify and recruit potential students. One strategy is to focus on students who are likely to complete their degrees within four years. This involves evaluating students' academic performance, extracurricular activities, and other factors to identify those who are most likely to succeed.

Another strategy is to provide financial aid to students who are likely to succeed. This helps to reduce the financial burden on students and increases their likelihood of completing their degrees.

The plan also involves working with local community organizations to identify potential students and provide information about the University of Oregon. This helps to increase the University's visibility and attract more qualified students.

Overall, the University of Oregon's admissions plan is designed to increase the number of students who complete their degrees within four years. This will help to reduce the enrollment decline and improve the University's academic reputation.

The plan also includes strategies to retain students who are already enrolled. This involves providing support and resources to help students succeed and ensuring that they have a positive experience at the University.

In conclusion, the University of Oregon's admissions plan is a comprehensive approach to addressing the enrollment decline and improving the University's academic reputation. The plan involves identifying and recruiting potential students, providing financial aid, and working with local community organizations to increase the University's visibility.

The plan also focuses on retaining students who are already enrolled. This involves providing support and resources to help students succeed and ensuring that they have a positive experience at the University.

Overall, the University of Oregon's admissions plan is a positive step towards addressing the enrollment decline and improving the University's academic reputation.
