Admissions plan involves recruitment network

The enrollment decline of the 1980s is a dilemma facing the entire university, according to Richard Eakin, vice president for student affairs. The strategy plan also suggests a shift in the university’s admissions office from selecting students with their own community and the state to an effort to recruit potential transfer students from other universities and from students lacking a high school diploma. In this case, the admissions office is working with the College of Business and the Division of Continuing Education to enhance its ability to attract students from other institutions.

The goal of the plan is to increase the number of students who apply to the university. The plan places emphasis on the university’s outgoing efforts to attract students from other institutions, according to Richard Eakin, vice president for student affairs. Visiting professionals enhance Green's graduate program in public administration

Green's graduate program in public administration is an attractive option for students who have one thing in mind — preparing themselves for a career in public service, whether as a civil servant, executive, administrator, or researcher. The program is designed to provide students with an understanding of the principles and practices of government and public administration at both national and international levels.

Dr. D.S. Deane, chair of the Department of Political Science, directed the Lyndon B. Johnson Institute at the University of Texas at Austin. For this Thursday, he talked about the importance of public administration programs in preparing professionals for the challenges of modern governance. He also discussed the role of public administration in developing effective policies and strategies to address complex social issues.

The importance of public administration programs in the 21st century was highlighted by Dr. Deane, who emphasized the need for trained professionals to address issues such as climate change, economic inequality, and social justice. He explained that public administration programs provide students with a comprehensive education in public policy, law, and management, equipping them to navigate the complexities of modern governance.

In his remarks, Dr. Deane underscored the significance of public administration programs in fostering a culture of accountability, transparency, and ethical decision-making. He urged students to consider pursuing a career in public administration, emphasizing the rewarding opportunities available in this field.

For more information about the public administration program at Green, interested students are encouraged to contact Dr. Deane or visit the program's website.

Olscamp outlines enrollment, budget picture for 1983-84

Olscamp will hold a town hall meeting on Monday, April 30, to discuss the university's enrollment and budget plans for the upcoming academic year. The meeting will provide an opportunity for students, faculty, and staff to ask questions and provide input on these critical areas.

The meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The agenda will include updates on enrollment projections, budget allocations, and financial aid programs. Olscamp will also provide an overview of the university's financial goals and objectives for the upcoming year.

The meeting is open to all members of the university community, and attendees are encouraged to attend to learn more about the university's plans and to provide feedback on these important issues. For more information, please contact the Olscamp office at 555-1234.

Conference to highlight 'practical turn' in philosophical research

Many scholars are emphasizing the importance of practical philosophy, drawing attention to the practical implications of philosophical ideas and their relevance to everyday life. This conference will explore the 'practical turn' in philosophical research, with a focus on the application of philosophical insights to real-world problems.

The keynote event will be a panel discussion featuring leading philosophers from around the world. The panelists will discuss the future of practical philosophy, its role in addressing contemporary challenges, and its potential to bridge the gap between academic philosophy and everyday life.

The conference will also include a series of workshops, seminars, and networking events, providing opportunities for attendees to engage with each other and to discuss the latest research in practical philosophy. Attendees are encouraged to submit proposals for workshops and seminars, and to apply for travel grants to help attend the conference.

The conference will conclude with a reception at a local restaurant, offering a chance for attendees to connect and enjoy local cuisine. The conference is open to all interested individuals, and registration is required.

For more information about the conference, including registration details and the full schedule of events, please visit the conference website or contact the organizers directly.

Serious OK's revised charter, merit pay plan

Volume VI, Number 41

Bowling Green State University

April 25, 1983

In what has been described as an "alarmist" campaign, the University Fighting Kittyhawks have been advocating a new charter for the university. The charter was presented to the Senate on April 19.

The legislature has yet to act on the proposed charter. The charter was approved by the Senate in March and is now pending before the House. The charter includes provisions for a new governing board, a new president, and a new vice president. The charter also provides for the establishment of a new university-wide budget, which will be based on the principles of merit pay and accountability.
