Once upon a time there was a little girl who loved the out doors. Most of all, she loved to go scat tered doors when it was fall each year. In the winter she enjoyed ice skating and sled riding, but spring was her favorite season.

Of course, this little girl had a very wise mother, who taught her that she could go bicycle riding each day, spring or no spring. The little girl was allowed to ride a bicycle in the fall, but only when the weather was really nice, and at night she had to stay in and study.

In due time the little girl became a grown up woman, and she went away to college. Having been taught that she must study to get along, the young woman made fine grades during the fall and winter term. She was proud of her good grades and even neglected the pleasures of ice skating and sled riding in the spring.

And then came spring. The young woman, who had made fine grades, didn't seem to understand that she couldn't resist the tennis courts, the quarry, and a bike ride. She didn't think her mother was not there to tell her she must go to school every day and study every night, the young woman merely glanced at the classes and forgetting text books in the evening.

* This is a fantasy.

I asked her to row. She did so, and I saw her. Now she that I knew her own hands were empty. And she that know she had none arms. And she that knew she had never having.
