Stubb makes big splash’ in NCAA swimming events

Swimming is a way of life for Tom Stubbs, who, unlike many others, literally “dives” into his work and has “made a splash” both on and off the pool. As a sexagenarian, Stubbs, director of aquatics for the School of Science at the University of Toledo, has spent several years building and mentoring talented student athletes. In the past four years, he has coached four national champion swimmers and a national champion relay team. His program has won 9 national championships and has been a part of 150 national meet final teams.

In 1982, the Toledo Blade named Stubbs Coach of the Year for the state of Ohio, and in 1984, the National Association of College Athletics Directors named him Coach of the Year. At the NCAA Championships, he has coached an individual national champion and a relay national champion.

For his contributions to the sport of swimming, Stubbs was inducted into the Ohio Swimming Hall of Fame in 1983 and the National Swimming Hall of Fame in 1984.

Stubbs makes 'big splash' in NCAA swimming events

Swimming is a way of life for Tom Stubbs, who, unlike many of his "literary" peers in his work and has "made a career of doing both."

Tom Stubbs, director of aquatics for the Bowling Green (Ohio) swimming team, has centered his career around swimming-related events, and has received national recognition for himself. In March 1989, for example, he was elected to the University of Alabama, where he served as head coach for 13 years, and was a member of the Olympic National Collegiate Swim Meet, where he was honored as the NCAA Coach of the Year.

The first five-year term runs through July 12. The eight-week term begins May 28 and ends Aug. 10. Only one file per student need be completed for the summer, regardless of the number of swimming seasons in which the student will compete.

Master Teacher's primary responsibility is helping students to succeed

When Carl Hoemberg grades his students' papers, he doesn't mark what's wrong. He marks what's right. "If you are doing it wrong," he says, "I tickle. You get it." He says he wants to transmit his personal interviewing skills to his students so they can communicate effectively with others.

Hoemberg also expects something from his students in return. "I expect them to be creative," he says. "I expect them to be problem solvers." He says he also expects them to be "proactive." "When I am not around," he says, "I expect them to be in charge of their learning development." You can't always have them cut from college, both good things and bad," he said. He also makes every effort to keep on top of things in the "real world" and to incorporate that knowledge into his classes. He pursues an active program of reading and writing. He also takes a great interest in the latest research and is familiar with the latest developments in the field of education. He also maintains a high level of interest in student advice, hoping to ensure that students do not lose focus on their goals. He also advises some 100 students, both critically and in several important ways.
