Professor knows effects of apartheid

Professor A. Domingo knows about South Africa.

Domingo said there are no business in South Africa that are not business in South Africa and only widening the gap between blacks and the government.

But changes in the country have to come from within, he said the government is set up to be in favor of discrimination, which will cause a change. He said the rates of unemployment in the country is very good.

The state has also been slow to teach.

“The quality of education has improved,” he said. “Our system is very good.”

Faculty/Staff Recognitions

Theresa Moak, assistant professor of English, has been named the recipient of the 1986 American Historical Association Fellowship, which provides financial support for research and study. The fellowship is awarded to outstanding students who have demonstrated exceptional scholarship in the field of American history.

Jeffrey Gordon, associate professor of biology, has been awarded a National Science Foundation Grant to support his research on the molecular mechanisms that govern the development and function of the immune system. The grant will enable Gordon to continue his work on understanding how these mechanisms are regulated and how they can be manipulated to treat disease.

Marcia Fink, adjunct associate professor of chemistry, has been named the recipient of the 1986 American Chemical Society Award for Distinguished Teaching. The award recognizes her outstanding teaching of chemistry and her contributions to the profession.

Steven] Sizer awards, the National Science Foundation has approved a grant to support the development of new educational materials for high school chemistry classes. The materials will focus on the use of modern technology in teaching chemistry and will be available for use in the fall of 1986.

Code change affects fee waivers

Some students will notice a change in their financial aid packages this semester. Effective immediately, the University is phasing out the use of fee waivers for students who have taken transfer credits. This change will affect approximately 100 students who have been using the fee waiver program to offset their tuition costs.

The move is part of the University's ongoing efforts to reduce its reliance on fee waivers and to increase the efficiency of its financial aid processes. The University hopes that this change will help to ensure that all students receive the financial aid they need to succeed.

Four students use Washington internships

The Western Center for Social Policy and Education is currently accepting applications for its annual Washington Internship Program. The program provides opportunities for students to work in Washington, D.C., on issues related to social policy and education. Interested students are encouraged to apply by January 1.

Hosting service available

University Hospitals and Hostess, a national supplier of food service products, is offering a new service to its clients. The service, called the Office of Hostess Service, will provide a variety of services to help hospitals and other institutions manage their food service operations more efficiently.

Library books are due

Books currently on loan to faculty and administrative staff with semester loan privileges are due by Dec. 20. All books must be returned or renewed by that date to the library from which they were borrowed.

New Year's Day is deadline for comet-watching trip

The University is sponsoring an annual comet-watching trip for students interested in astronomy. The trip is scheduled for New Year's Day, January 1, and will provide an opportunity for students to observe comets and other celestial objects from a comfortable and safe location.

Insurance on a salary of $5,000 and $6,000,000,000 per occurrence, which is only one and one-half times the salary of a comparable employee, would cost less than 1% of the salary. The difference would be determined by the company.

In other states, the concept of a "one-for-one" rule has been adopted. This rule states that a company's insurance coverage should be equal to its share of the total insurance premium paid by all employees. This would help to ensure that companies are not paying more than their fair share of the cost of insurance.

In some cases, the "one-for-one" rule may result in higher insurance premiums for employees because it may not take into account the specific needs of each employee. However, the rule is intended to provide a fair and equitable way of determining insurance coverage for employees.
Commentary

To The Editor: The story in the Dec. 9 issue of the Monitor summarizes a Faculty Senate meeting in which essentially the same proposal that was defeated by the university's governing board in 1967 and 1970 was again defeated, by an even closer margin this time. The meeting, on the face of it, seemed to be a calm and reasoned discussion of the issues involved. Yet there are few institutions in which the public's right to know about the deliberations of a decision-making body is so obviously important.

The meeting was attended by faculty members from a number of departments, and the university president was present. The meeting was recorded and transcribed, and the transcript is now available for public inspection. The transcript reveals that the discussion was characterized by heated exchanges, with some faculty members expressing strong views on both sides of the issue.

This is not an unusual occurrence at university meetings. However, the fact that the public has a right to know about such meetings is not always recognized. In some cases, the meetings may be closed to the public altogether. In others, they may be open, but with restrictions on who can attend or on what is discussed.

The importance of public access to university meetings cannot be overemphasized. It is essential for the university community to be informed about the decisions that are made by the university's governing body.

Scovell to edit national biochemistry colloquium

William M. Scovell, professor of biochemistry at Ohio University, is scheduled to edit the National Biochemistry Colloquium. The colloquium is a series of lectures and discussions on recent developments in biochemistry.

The colloquium is held annually and is attended by biochemists from around the world. William M. Scovell, who has been a professor at Ohio University for 30 years, will be the editor for the 2020 edition.

"Concepts in Biochemistry," the colloquium is named, will appear in the national-nominated Journal of Biochemistry Education. This colloquium, which emphasizes the teaching of biochemistry to students at major and undergraduate levels, is the result of a five-year effort to discuss biochemistry to the students in a more interesting way.

The colloquium has been held since 1990 and is attended by more than 1,000 people. The colloquium is open to the public and is free of charge.

In Brief

Nathan will direct gallery

Johanna N. Nathan has been named director of the University's Fine Arts Gallery. In her new position, she will be responsible for overseeing the gallery's operations and programming.

The gallery features a wide range of exhibits, including paintings, sculptures, and photographs. The gallery also hosts lectures, workshops, and other events.

Passages face detection, in the pass, Jan. 6. 1984. Computer Science will detect all Walh, professor of psychology, and his team of researchers.

The team used a computer to detect facial features and to recognize people.

Urbino receives honor

The New York City Business Education Association has awarded a Distinguished Service Award to Maria Urbino, professor of business administration.

Dr. Urbino, who has been a professor at the university for 25 years, received the award for her dedication to education and her commitment to excellence.

Code change affects fees

Some employees will notice a change in their regular tuition fees this fall. The new fees will be effective next month and will affect all employees.

The change in fees is due to a reduction in the amount of state funding that the university receives. The reduction in funding will result in a decrease in the state's contribution to the university's budget.

The new fees will be effective for the fall semester only. The university is currently working on a plan to address the shortfall in funding for the next fiscal year.

Four students use Washington internships

The Washington Center Internships Program, which provides opportunities for undergraduate students to earn credit for internships, has awarded internships to four students.

The students were selected from a competitive pool of applicants and were chosen for their academic achievement, leadership potential, and experience.

The internships will run for 10 weeks during the summer of 2022. The students will work with various organizations in Washington, D.C., and gain valuable experience in the field of their choice.

The Washington Center Internships Program is a national program that offers internships to undergraduate students from across the United States. The program provides students with the opportunity to gain practical experience and to explore career options in a variety of fields.

More information about the program can be found on the Washington Center website at www.washingtoncenter.org.
The Student Recreation Center and the Office of Student Affairs will host an open house for faculty and staff and their families on Thursday, Dec. 19, from 9 to 9 p.m. Mary Edmonds, vice president for student affairs, said the event is "a nice way of saying thank you to the University for its support of the Student Recreation Center. It is also one way for Student Affairs and other areas of the campus community to mix."

People attending the open house should come dressed for activity. Free activities include instruction in nautilus training, water aerobics, wallyball, aerobics and swimming. Refreshments will be served beginning at 8 p.m. and Santa Claus is scheduled to make an appearance.
