"Return Of Peter Grimm" Presented To Large Audience By Kent State Players

By Jim Liebersher

Some 350 students watched the Kent State University Traveling Players present the play "Return of Peter Grimm."

The play, which opens the question, "Can the dead come back?" has been attractively mounted, deftly directed, and well acted. It could, however, be entirely divided between the stage and the audience. It takes place on the walls, the benches in the long aisle for wood paneling, the antiques, the pole—almost (but not quite) pulled the actors into scenic needs.

Edward D. Stedman as Peter Grimm and Leo Patek as the Flask have the main burden of the play. Dr. Peter Grimm, a scientist, seeks to return his deceased wife to life. But his efforts are frustrated by the Flask, a poor man with a money-making scheme on which he has stumbled.

The setting by Wes Egans, technical director of the Kent State Theatre, gives the play depth and richness. The production brings the audience into the play rather than holding it at bay.

Maurice Morgan, as the deceased Brian, is a distant relative of the Flask. Brian's death is an accident. He avenges himself by killing the Flask. He is the murderer in a very obvious character study.

ON-CAMPUS HOUSING

The facilities at the Nest are not adequate because of being overcrowded. Joe stated, "The Student Union should be the center of campus activity, but it's now nothing but a place to get a cup of coffee."

Pat Belongs To 4 Honoraries

By Joan Carlson

"She's as sweet as the maple syrup that comes from her hometown in Barre, Vermont. "That's what people say about Pat Sangiucetti."

Smiling and friendly, this gal gives a real third effort of listening, and she shows it.

A senior and music major, Pat intends to touch choral groups in elementary and high schools, and do a lot of traveling following graduation.

She has enjoyed the A Cappella tours in the past and as business manager for the group this year, she has been busy making last minute arrangements for their trip to New England. (The show itself is entitled "Songs of the Stars," and revolves around the old home town where they will make an appearance in the Masonic Hall.)

Hiking in the Green Mts. of Vermont is what Pat enjoys most when she is home. One summer she worked as a waitress in a resort on Mt. Mansfield, the highest peak in the Green Mts.

Bicycling, hiking, working with children, and writing are Pat's hobbies. She has a real desire to write children's music books someday which will include clever sketches and pictures to make the lessons more enjoyable.

She is a member of Cup and Gown, as well as the adoration, music, and French honoraries.

During the past year, Pat was an accompanist in the dining department of the National Cooperative Recreational School in Plymouth, N.H. She took courses in recreation leadership there, and returned later in the summer to supervise the activities in a children's playground in Barre.

A GOOD TEAM—WIN OR LOSE
Bowling Green has but one game to win to complete its undisputed football season. This is the toughest game of them all, however, and a defeat is just as probable as a victory. The Falcons this year are a fighting football club, even an unpredictable one. Whether it wins or loses Saturday the hats of all the students should be off in tribute to the excellent record of the season. Bob Whitaker’s boys are one of only 18 unbeaten teams in the country. BOWLINGWAARD BOUND?
Should John Carroll fall before the Orange and Brown, the chances are excellent that Bowling Green will receive some bowl bid. The most desirable invitation which we might get is one from the Sun Bowl. This is considered one of the top flight post-season games in the nation and of course such an encounter would be a great treat for the fans as well as for the university in general. Last year Miami of Ohio went to El Paso and the fine showing of the Bulldogs marked school’s emergence as a top flight football power. This year Miami has been defeated and its once-promising Dayton, has been laid to. Scoring the list of schools with unbeaten records only California, Michigan, Notre Dame, Army, Cincinnati, and Welseyan are lesser than Bowling Green. None of these, with the possible exception of Clemson, will be
