Bowling Green State University
Spaeth Lecture Illustrates Value Of 'Enjoying' Music

"Music is not just an art but a recreation," according to Dr. Sigmund Spaeth in his talk, "Music For Fun," last Wednesday at the 10 a.m. assembly.

Dr. Spaeth, a music critic and tune detective, recommends music for all people, especially as a recreation. He said people have a sense of rhythm which enables them to enjoy music. They learn to pick out the time and then the harmony. People learn to enjoy music first with their feet, then with their heart, then their head. The term "-classic" scares most people, said Dr. Spaeth, but he prefers to call music that has stood the test of time "permanent music.

He demonstrated many of the popular songs taken from permanent music by playing several hit tunes such as "Tonight We Love," "I'm Always Chasin' Rainbows," and "Til the End of Time," and then played the original score from which they came. He also told the story about the man who liked one of the popular songs very much. When Dr. Spaeth played the classic from which the melody was taken, the man told him it was the best arrangement he had heard yet.

Dr. Spaeth said he could teach anyone to play the piano in five minutes. He exploited the key-board and pointed out C, E, and G. By using the same three notes in different positions on the key-board he developed several chords and a base accompaniment.

He sang the melody of several different songs and played an accompaniment by using the chords derived from those notes. After disclosing his method he said, "Three notes will take you a long way in music."

"Don't worry about your taste as long as you have an honest interest in music. As long as you enjoy it that is all that matters," declared Dr. Spaeth.

He gave this basic definition of music: it is the organization of sound toward beauty. The more you listen to music the easier it will be, according to him, to pick out the five basic qualities: rhythm, melody, harmony, tone color, and form.

Dr. Spaeth, formerly a music critic and now conductor of the weekly quiz during the Metropolitan Opera broadcast, showed his talent and humor in proving his points on music for fun.

Bee Gee Keeps Growing... In recent years there has been a large and conspicuous change in Bowling Green State University. The war and its aftermath of educational consciousness has demanded that the University grow up and expand in many ways. This year, in the three commencement ceremonies, 822 students in all will be graduated. Not so very long ago the entire student body did not include this number in a single year. Changes in the world have spread over the country and learning here during 1948-49 and about to be graduated.
