Fine Arts Building set for addition

The Ohio Board of Regents has approved an additional $14 million in capital improvements for the University. Robert K. McGee, dean of the Fine Arts Building, said the $14 million would be used to improve the building and construction is expected to begin in May 1990. "The key to the project will be begun on the first section of the building before the end of the fiscal year," he said. McGee said the project was delayed because of the increase in the cost of building materials.

ASC submits contract changes for review by president, trustees

Administrative Staff Council proposed recommendations for proposal changes in administrative staff contracts at its first meeting. Changes are supported in the areas of contract renewal, grievance procedures, and employee benefits.

Mackenzie Gore, ASC chair, said the recommendations were prepared two years ago, but were tabled temporarily.

According to Gore, changes to the proposals are needed because the current contracts are out of date and the recommendations were prepared to bring the contracts in line with current employment standards.

The proposed contract changes, which are tabled for review, include a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees, a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees, and a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees.

The proposed contract changes also include a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees, a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees, and a plan to increase the minimum wage for classified employees.

ASC submits contract changes for review by president, trustees

Administrative Staff Council approved recommendation for proposal changes in administrative staff contracts at its monthly meeting. Changes are supported in the areas of contract renewals, noncurrent employees, and other administrative procedures.

Patrick Goel, ASC chair, said the recommendations were prepared two years ago, but were tabled temporarily. After making some adjustments to the proposal during the recent month, more meetings are needed. "We decided the fine time was right to preview a second draft of the proposal," he said. "It will be reviewed by the president, and when we are satisfied we believe it will be endorsed at ASC council.

Goel noted that the new proposal clarifies the issues of the contract for administrative staff. It also clearly spells out the conditions for continued employment, salary, benefits or other plan-related concerns.

In other business, Robert Gross, an assistant professor of English, discussed the number of applications received for employment. He said 500 applications for administrative positions have been received in the past year. The university will soon begin to review the applications and make decisions on appointments.

The University is in its second year of offering "Writing in the Classroom" workshops once a month for new, experienced, and returning English faculty. The workshops are designed to help faculty improve their teaching and writing skills. The workshops are open to all faculty members and are held on the second Thursday of each month. The next workshop will be held on Thursday, April 8 at 3 p.m. in the lounges at the main building.

Policy Commentary

Editor's Note

The last decade has been an explosion of "writing in the classroom" workshops for high school and college campuses throughout the country. Close to half of our colleges and universities (47 percent) now have some form of program to train intensive faculty from all disciplines to write in their classes. This is a phenomenon that we need to pay attention to.

What is it about? Why is it happening? Why should we pay attention? The answer to these questions is not clear, but there are several possible factors.

One factor is the increased emphasis on writing in the classroom. Writing is an essential tool for learning and communicating, and the ability to write effectively is increasingly important in today's society.

Another factor is the growing recognition of the benefits of writing in the classroom. Writing can help students develop critical thinking, problem-solving, and decision-making skills, as well as improve their understanding of course content.

A third factor is the increasing availability of resources for writing in the classroom. There are now many excellent resources available, including books, journals, and online resources.

A fourth factor is the increased emphasis on writing in the classroom as a means of enhancing the student learning experience. Writing can help students develop a deeper understanding of course content, and can also help them develop more effective communication skills.

In conclusion, the growth of "writing in the classroom" workshops is a phenomenon that we need to pay attention to. We need to understand the reasons for this growth, and how it can be used to enhance the student learning experience.

BGRG program attractive to donors

Pretzels make donation--and benefit, too

Radhika and Denise Purcell recently made a substantial contribution to the university library and student life center to benefit the university's students and faculty. The donation was made to the BGRA program, which is currently under construction.

The BGRA program is a state-of-the-art building that will house the university's library, student life center, and a number of other facilities. The building will be built on the site of the former library, which was destroyed by fire in 1987.

The donation was made in honor of the university's 150th anniversary, and is the largest single gift in the university's history.

The BGRA program is expected to be completed by 2023, and is expected to cost approximately $100 million.

Ardbell discusses healthy lives

Ardell, whose specialties include nutrition and exercise, was the keynote speaker at the Wellness Seminar this week.

"Living a healthy personal lifestyle is the key to maintaining a healthy heart," she said. "We need to make sure we eat a well-balanced diet, exercise regularly, and avoid smoking and excess alcohol consumption."

Ardell discussed the importance of maintaining a healthy weight, and the benefits of regular exercise. She also emphasized the importance of getting enough sleep and reducing stress.

In conclusion, Ardell's presentation highlighted the importance of maintaining a healthy lifestyle. She emphasized the benefits of regular exercise, a well-balanced diet, and reducing stress.

Auditions planned

Auditions for "A Midsummer Night's Dream" will be held on Thursday, March 3 from 5 to 7 p.m. and on Saturday, March 5 from 3 to 7 p.m. at the theatre on campus. The auditions will be held in the Black Box Theatre and are open to all students.

The play is directed by Emily Green, an assistant professor of theatre and dance. The production will be presented in the fall semester, and is expected to be a major production for the department.

Both male and female roles will be available, and all interested students are encouraged to audition. Students are asked to prepare a 1-2 minute monologue or song and to bring a headshot and resume to the auditions.

diers who pledge second gift fund

This fall brought 2,620 new pledges to the Telefund campaign, which is dedicated to raising funds for the university's annual fund. The Telefund campaign is expected to raise $10 million this year.

The Telefund campaign is one of the university's most important fundraising efforts. It is a way for alumni and friends to support the university's general operating expenses, including scholarships, faculty salaries, and student programs.

The Telefund campaign is also a way for alumni and friends to participate in the university's annual fund, which is the university's primary source of revenue.

The Telefund campaign is expected to be successful, and is expected to raise the university's overall annual fund goal of $10 million.

The Telefund campaign is supported by the university's staff and faculty, as well as by a number of alumni and friends who are dedicated to supporting the university's mission.
