Forget the vegetable. Squash has a new meaning here

Squash is not just an orange, citrus fruit. It has evolved into a team sport that requires intense physical exertion. Squash is played in a court that measures approximately 40 feet by 20 feet, with a net dividing it into two equal halves. The game is played with a lightweight racket and a ball that is smaller than a tennis ball. Points are scored by hitting the ball into the opponent's side without allowing it to bounce, while staying within the court's boundaries.

Squash is known for its high-intensity and fast-paced gameplay, making it a popular choice for those looking for a challenging and engaging sport. It is played in various formats, including singles, doubles, and mixed doubles, with different levels of competition such as club, national, and international events.

The game of squash is played on a hard court with two clubhouses and a number of players. It is a popular choice for students and athletes looking to challenge themselves physically and mentally.

The sport of squash has a rich history, with origins dating back to ancient civilizations. It gained popularity in the 19th century and has since become a professional sport with a dedicated following worldwide.

In addition, squash and department chairs are being encouraged to establish a mentorship program, known as Higher FTS, to identify and support teaching excellence. This program is based on evidence from the literature and practical experience at the University of Toledo.

The Higher FTS program aims to create a supportive environment for new and experienced faculty members. The program includes a series of workshops and seminars focusing on teaching strategies, student engagement, and professional development. Faculty members are paired with mentors who provide guidance and feedback.

Dr. Robert Weide, director of the Higher FTS program, emphasizes the importance of mentorship in enhancing teaching effectiveness and promoting a positive academic environment. He highlights the benefits of collaborative learning and the role of feedback in improving teaching practices.

The Higher FTS program is expected to have a significant impact on faculty development, resulting in improved teaching outcomes and increased student engagement. The program is open to all faculty members and is designed to foster a community of practice among educators.
CSC members ponder future of council pending Feb. 4 election

Classified Staff Council spent a portion of its Jan. 18 meeting discussing the future of the university's classified staff union, attached to the Inspector General's office, the University of Florida's food service, cadet pharmacy services and other areas. The union includes some employees of the University's food service, cadet pharmacy services and other areas.

Ballroom Grand, chair of CSC, said about 30 classified staff members were in attendance. They were joined by several university employees who do not belong to the union. They were encouraged to join the union, Ballroom Grand said. The meeting was designed to allow those interested in joining the union to ask questions and learn more about what the union offers to members.

Ballroom Grand said the university employees who attend the meeting were encouraged to join the union. They were encouraged to ask questions and learn more about what the union offers to members.

Concert to feature guitar great Tal Farlow

Legendary jazz guitarist Tal Farlow will present an evening of jazz at 8 p.m. Monday, March 23 in the Moore Music Arts Center. The program will include jazz standards, an exciting dishwasher jazz medley, and the world premier of Farlow’s original work, Seclusion.

Tal Farlow, considered one of the pioneers of modern jazz guitar, is also known for his electric piano, which he uses to conduct his band to create a unique sound. His last recording was made in 1964 with the label of ‘64. Farlow’s music is often associated with avant-garde works, and he has received critical acclaim for his unique approach to the instrument.

The concert will take place in the Moore Music Arts Center, 215 S. Moore Street, Bowling Green, Ky. Tickets are $10 at the door. For more information, please visit talfarlow.com or contact the Moore Music Arts Center at 270-845-3800.

Lecture to promote peace

A Soviet woman who has become an international symbol of peace and understanding will bring her version of “citizen diplomacy” to Bowling Green as a speaker for the University’s international lecture series.

Dr. Nida Bunche, director and founder of the Office of International Children’s Peace Congress, will speak at 11 a.m. Monday, March 22 in the Moore Music Arts Center. Her presentation will focus on the importance of peace education and the role of citizens in promoting peace around the world.

Dr. Bunche, a former diplomat and academic, has dedicated her career to promoting peace and understanding between different cultures. She is the daughter of Ralph Bunche, who was a professor at the University of Michigan and a member of the United Nations Security Council.

Her lecture will take place in the Moore Music Arts Center, 215 S. Moore Street, Bowling Green, Ky. The event is free and open to the public. For more information, please contact the Moore Music Arts Center at 270-845-3800.
