Experiencing art is a daily job for director

As an art director's work is much more than what is visible in the end product, the director of the Fine Arts Gallery, Jalil Nathan, spends much time behind the scenes to ensure that the final product is of the highest quality. "Often saying, 'It’s not all that glamorous,' Nathan has worked at the gallery since 1985, and since then, he has overseen the development of the gallery's space and the organization's mission. "It’s like a living organism, it’s always changing," he said. "It’s a collaborative effort between artists and curators to bring the best art to the community." Nathan’s work involves overseeing the entire exhibition process, from concept to installation, ensuring that the art is properly displayed and that the visitor experience is enhanced. He is also responsible for managing the gallery’s budget, overseeing the marketing and promotion of exhibitions, and maintaining the gallery’s physical space. Nathan is passionate about the role of art in society, and he believes that the gallery has a crucial role in providing a platform for diverse voices and perspectives. "We strive to present a wide range of artworks that reflect the diversity of our community," he said. "Art has the power to connect people and to provoke thought and discussion." Nathan is committed to making the gallery accessible to all, and he works to ensure that the exhibitions are inclusive and accessible to people of all backgrounds. "We want to create an environment where everyone feels welcome and valued," he said. "Art should be for everyone." Nathan is a graduate of the University of Dayton, where he earned a degree in art history. He has worked at several museums and galleries in his career, including the Columbus Museum of Art and the Toledo Museum of Art. In his free time, Nathan enjoys traveling, hiking, and spending time with his family. He is married to Jodi Nathan and has two children, ages 10 and 12. The family lives in Columbus, and they enjoy exploring the local arts scene together. "Art is a part of who I am," Nathan said. "It’s a source of joy and inspiration for me."
Try asking college students anywhere in the country about their ability to recite "The Star-Spangled Banner" or "My Country 'Tis of Thee" and they might be able to recite a few verses, but few will be able to quote lines from the full text.

At a University of Maine class last October, when students were asked to recite "The Star-Spangled Banner," only one student knew the complete lyrics.

In a recent survey of college students at the University of Maine, 54% could recite less than 25% of the national anthem, 30% could recite 25-50%, 10% could recite 51-75%, and 6% could recite 76-100% of the lyrics.

Forum focuses on harassing campus behavior

Dr. Elizabeth Necpaky, psychologist, tells there is a cycle for students to follow if they receive sexual harassment. She should discuss the cycle so they can prevent it. She stressed that campus harassment is serious and should not be taken lightly.

The topic is sexual harassment. It is important that students are aware of it. Dr. Necpaky says that students should know that they can go to the dean of student affairs and say "I do not want to continue this." She encourages students to talk to professors and others who will be able to help them.

Campus makes it clear why you should buckle up

How many people would jump head first from the top of a three story building? That is a question Pete Rosan asks when talking to people about wearing their seatbelts. "There are too many people traveling 30 mph without a seatbelt on and his window." It could be a fatal decision.

Dr. Necpaky has been working on campus for over a year and has noticed an increase in the number of incidents of harassment. She said that she is a proponent to go beyond the classroom and be aware of what is going on outside of it. She also said that it is important to be aware of what is going on in other places.
