Daniel Chakravarty, economist, explained the United States' position in the world and the necessity of a positive foreign policy. He emphasized the importance of establishing that the United States is not communist. In his view, a positive policy is necessary to protect the United States and its allies, and to ensure the survival of the American way of life. He argued that the United States must stand up for human rights and freedoms, and work towards a world where peace and prosperity prevail.

As part of the conference, Daniel Chakravarty delivered a lecture titled "A Positive Policy for the United States," which focused on the critical role of a strong foreign policy in maintaining national security and promoting international cooperation. He stressed the importance of diplomacy and dialogue in resolving conflicts and fostering stability around the world.

The conference also featured discussions on various aspects of foreign policy, including trade, military strategy, and environmental stewardship. Participants from diverse backgrounds exchanged ideas and perspectives, highlighting the need for collaborative efforts to address global challenges.

In conclusion, the conference was a significant platform for intellectual exchange and strategic planning. It underscored the importance of fostering international understanding and cooperation to advance the common good and ensure a safer, more prosperous world for all nations.
DRAFTING OF 18-YEAR-OLDS MAY ANSWER OLD PROBLEM

The debate of the year is obviously the one now being thrashed about by the United States Congress—whether to lower the draft age to the 18-year-old group of young men.

Arguments both pro and con are now flowing in the governmental body of our country. Providing it is passed, the minimum age group which will be immediately affected are those now 18 to 22 years of age—over 16 years of age and if, when those men have been replaces, the age will be lowered again.

One of the arguments which seem to have been disregarded or so far in the proceedings has been that 18-year-olds were drafted during the last war without hesitation. Gen. PH. B. Harkness, former president of Columbia University, spoke a smooth word or two from the standpoint of both an educator and an army general. In his speech, he called it that men between the ages of 18 and 22 make the best soldiers... by easier to train, easier to cope with.

As an educator, he stated that he would refuse these men’s request interrupted between they began college from after. The transition from college life to a military one is more difficult from if the situation was turned around.

As a man who has done much thinking about the situation from all points of view, the general has apparently done a complete job.

One may wonder just how this situation will affect the colleges of the country and especially Bowling Green. Some look upon the whole situation as being very obvious and that is the college of men to come to the universities of tomorrow, if this plan passes, will be of a more mature

Students Anticipate Action
In Event Of Atomic Bomb
What would you do if you were in a classroom when an atomic bomb was dropped on Bowling Green?

The question came as a shock to most of the people questioned this week in the Campus Opinion poll. Then, as they glanced up at the sky and down at the circles, and tried to picture an atom bomb landing here, the almost inevitable first reaction was, "What would there be to do?" "I'd probably be too frightened to think," said one.

Their complete answers express an interesting contrast between the Americans, who face the problem with optimism and in an overly casual manner, and the foreign students, who in their native countries have gone through some of the horrors of war.

Roland Bacheller, senior, of Yugoslavia, answered, "I probably would do what I was taught...I imagine the effect would be something like that of drowning. The part would flash before your eyes, and your future would be gone."

Randall Bacheller Edith Haagse
Edith Haagse, senior, German, was among those who think that when an atomic war is imminent, there'll be no use to do anything. She believes that chances for survival are for the brave who stick around and fight. In a recent discussion, she said, "If I were to fight, I would probably save a few prayers on the way down."
