Larry Smith has a yen for life, and it's reflected in 'Ohio Zen'

Two posts which works express their own sense of a life well led, with a sense of fulness have collaborated their poetry to produce the poetry of Dr. Larry Smith. English and Humanities and foreign language faculty, Dr. Fred Miller, Professor of English and Humanities at the University of Nebraska at Kearney, Nebraska
for the University of Nebraska at Kearney, Kansas.

and "Ohio Zen," published in 1992, have been honed with the editorial input of "An American Visionary," an old friend.

In "An American Visionary," Dr. Larry Smith expresses his sense of self and his sense of the world through poetry. The book is divided into two parts: the first part deals with the experience of being an artist, and the second part focuses on the experience of being a teacher.

Dr. Larry Smith is an associate professor of English at the University of Nebraska at Kearney. He received his Ph.D. in English from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1987 and his M.A. in English from the University of Wisconsin at Madison in 1983. He is currently working on a book on the life and works of the American poet Walt Whitman.

Two posts whose works express their views and reflect their strong dedication to helping others have a lot in common. The first is the poet who, in various forms, has written about our society. The second is the poet of the University Libraries and Center for the Arts. Larry Smith, who has served as an advisor to the library since its opening in 1960, has written extensively about his life in Ohio. His other poetry includes "The Unfinished Symphony," "Paper, Rock, and Assos These States," and "The Dreamer." He has also done fine illustrations for the book "Journey of Discovery: An Atlas of North American History." His work is characterized by its vitality and emotional depth.

CSC hears report on BGSU's growing concern of health costs

Kimer said, investigating the child care center and learning commons, the committee noted that employees pay $3 per child for child care.

"I don't see how we can have a self-sufficient child care that offers quality service. That's our kind of agenda," she said.

Kimer said the Child Care Center operates through a university department, but the board of trustees who run the center jointly with the board of trustees of the University of Akron (non-conference) Jan. 31 ends. Wages are $3.75 per hour.

Kimer said the administrative personnel director, Robert Martin, vice president for Personnel Services, said there is no indication that salary increases to employees will be lower than the 1.4 percent increase in the nation's average.
