The Stronghold Of Complacency?

An intensive nation-wide effort to combat the mounting shortage of teachers in the nation's colleges was launched with the announcement by the Ford Foundation of a $25 million dollar appropriation for a large scale extension and development of our education programs. The announcement of the Foundation's action will support a broad program to attract able students into the academic profession.

And perhaps this questioning, these surveys, and these statistics may enable us all to understand the prevalence of complacency in our modern generation.

It is true that the complacent attitude so characteristic of our "silent generation" is a reflection of attitudes and conditions within many of our national institutions, of which our educational institutions are perhaps the most significant. The final tally is taken, our education system is the strongest, and it cannot be destroyed. The change is coming, however, from a condition propagated in our economic, political, and social system.
