The Day's The Thing; Keep Fingers Crossed

By George Davis

Editorial Speaking

Editorial Freedom

"In its . . . year of editorial freedom unhindered by restraints from either the administration or the student body," this slogan appears in the mast of every issue of the University of Northern California Daily Texiel. A statement of this type is the aspiration of the NEWS. As conditions now stand, this phrase could honestly appear in our newspaper.

In past years students have felt that censorship came from the administration. Now the possibility of restrictions comes from a new direction. We are sure that the proposal of Student Council to edit the NEWS is a member of that body is not designed consciously to have a restrictive force on this paper. Yet as we see it, this is what could easily happen.

We feel that it is a part of the editor's job to attend Council meetings as well as other activities that affect the student body. It is only by being aware of the undertones of student opinion that the NEWS can serve the University as it should.

President Ralph G. Harshman recently disapproved Council's recommendation to make the editor a member of Council. In a letter to Council he cited the nonrepresentative nature of the student's position as a reason for his disapproval. Further discussion with President Harshman has revealed that this is not the only reason he had for disapproving the recommendation.

He feels that the editor of the NEWS would not be in an independent, objective position if he were a member of Council.

We tend to agree. Indeed, the editor would be asked to comment upon his own action. He would have the "power of the press" on his side to sway the student body on any given political question in which he had a vital interest.

There is a real danger that the paper would become a tool of Student Council instead of remaining the independent, objective position if he were a member of Council.

Utter Hatred Of Comma Still Remains Unshaken

By Jerry Wallace

In my last column I advocated the complete abolishment of the comma from the English language. The response from the reader did little to shake my utter hatred of that tiny thorn in the side of the American student.

I received one letter from an irate young man who referred to this column as "pseudo-thought provoking." Now this particular term has always irritated me greatly. I have heard my psychiatrists use it many times. I visit him regularly and spend a great deal of time in the dark quarters of his phobias.

I'm not sure if I'm helping him or not, but he has stopped using such terms as "pseudo."

This same angry young man as so referred to this 22-year-old writer as a "boy wonder." Again I'm not sure if I'm helping him or not. He is always referring to me this way.

In the same letter I was referred to as "a frustrated businessman speaking a .3 grade average." I can only say that I am not a businessman now. I was a member of that class in 1964 but now a senior. Also, I am 19 years to eat.

I also received a good-humored note from your staff of the BG NEWS and asked me not to send consideration my 32-year-old self.

As for the frustrated part, I must admit that I am a trifle on the sensitive side. The anxiety stems from my deep concern for college students who are in the grip of the egomaniacs who insist on using long and involved sentences when two shorter ones will do.

He was referring to the part of my last column in which I said, "This column may not appeal to you but is part of a campaign in favor of fragmentary sentences and unimportant statements.

With the support of English professors here, I now plan to inaugurate a campaign in favor of fragmentary sentences and unimportant statements.

If you will take "heed" of that tiny thorn in the side of the American student, you will have the power of the press on your side to sway the student body on any given political question in which you have a vital interest.
