Faculty contribute to 'life balance' conversation

It's the classic dilemma of university faculty—how to balance teaching and research. Faculty often say it can feel that each is to the detriment of the other, particularly for tenure-track faculty striving to publish while also engaged in the time-intensive preparation for teaching new courses. About six years ago, a group of BGSU faculty formed a learning community to study this "life out of balance" and share ideas and strategies with one another.

Meeting every other week at the Center for Teaching and Learning, eight to 10 members discussed their research projects, and the group brainstormed how better integration of their courses with these research projects could enhance both.

Several members of the interdisciplinary group (some of whom have since moved on to other universities) have recently published the results of their collaborations in the peer-reviewed Journal on Excellence in College Teaching. The article title, "The Ripple Effect: Lessons from a Research and Teaching Faculty Learning Community," refers to their discovery that identifying ways to teach more efficiently not only strengthened their research agendas but also led to more effective teaching.

Discussing their pedagogical approaches are Drs. Andrew Hershberger, art history, on "Using Digital Technology in Art History Courses"; Paul Cesarini, visual communication technology, on "Using Undergraduate Researchers: Harvesting Students and Building Collaboration"; Jeffrey Gordon, geography, on "Using Student-Generated Exam Question-and Answer Sets," and Canchu Lin, communication, on "Using Blackboard to Generate a Teacher-Student Communication Network." Also included are former BGSU faculty members Drs. Maria Spence, social work; Andrew Mara, English; David Albrecht, accounting, and Kathleen Jorissen, education.

The learning community first presented the outcomes of its explorations in 2005 at the 25th annual Lilly Conference on College Teaching, at Miami University, and that same year jointly published in the journal Academe. The current BGSU faculty shared their most recent results at the 2009 BGSU Research Conference.

Irish pianist to give Nitschke Memorial Concert

Pianist Barry Douglas will perform the Lois M. Nitschke Memorial Concert as part of the Festival Series.

The concert will be held at 8 p.m. Jan. 26 in Kobacker Hall at the Moore Musical Arts Center. Douglas will perform works from the Romantic period, including selections from Tchaikovsky's "The Seasons," selections from Rachmaninoff's "Moments Musicaux," and Schumann's "Sonata No. 1 in F-sharp Minor." The second half of the performance will feature Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Douglas enjoys a successful solo and recording career, which has flourished since he won the Gold Medal at the 1986 Tchaikovsky International Piano Competition in Moscow. Adding to the prestige of this award, he is the only non-Russian since Van Cliburn to have won the award outright.

Adult tickets are $36, $28 and $20. Student tickets are priced at $29, $22 and $15. Call the box office weekdays from noon-6 p.m. at 2-8171 or email musictickets@bgsu.edu.
IN BRIEF

Reddin Symposium examines Canadian government's role in national culture

The government of Canada has long played a direct role in controlling and cultivating aspects of the nation's culture, to an extent not seen in the United States. At the 23rd annual Reddin Symposium, to be held on Saturday (Jan. 23), three engaging speakers will address how this has played out in the areas of music, sports and the cultural expression of Native Peoples.

The free symposium, "Music, Medals, and Mainstreaming: Cultural Policy in Canada," will take place from 11:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in 101 Olscamp Hall. It is presented by the Canadian Studies Program.

The speakers:
• BGSU's Dr. David Jackson, political science, will focus on the Canadian government's support of the music industry, which takes two forms. Musicians and bands may receive support for putting on tours and producing recordings. Second and more importantly, the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission enforces strict rules on the percentage of "Canadian" music, radio and music-oriented television that stations must play.
• Dr. Ian Ritchie, Department of Physical Education and Kinesiology, Brock University, St. Catharines, Ontario, will discuss how the federal government of Canada has played a direct role in the fitness of Canadians and the development of a high-performance sport system designed specifically to win medals in international competition, especially the Olympic Games.
• Dean Jacobs, director of the Heritage Centre at Bkejwanong First Nation and a former chief, will talk about how the Canadian government for over a century tried to reshape First Nation cultures—to "Christianize and civilize" them, and how the Indian Department has recently apologized for these policies and is encouraging in various ways revitalization of Aboriginal ways of life.

Though the event is free, reservations are requested. To register, call the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs at 2-2147 or email vpsa@bgsu.edu.

The symposium, designed to enhance community understanding of Canada, is made possible through the support of the Reddin family of Bowling Green, the many contributors to the Reddin Endowment Fund, and the Canadian Consulate in Detroit.
