A touch of greenery

By Joe W. Green

Having nothing else to do, you might meander over to the Library and study some study habits. The rituals that some students conduct while they are studying are innumerable. The other night one fellow was chewing on his thumbnail so hard that it looked as though he was going to chew down to his elbow at any second. While he was chewing he would look down at his book, up at his disappearing thumb, and across the table at the couple Indian wrestling. When the couple picked this time and plate to Indian wrestling is useless, but there they were. Anyway, she took four out of five. They might have continued but she browned him over against the edge of the cafeteria, ditto: Hey! Was he mad.

So, if things get far enough, you might get a chance to really show up his political motivations.

American Funerals Expensive: Rising Costs Blamed On Public

Approximately $2 billion is spent each year on funerals in the United States. A spokesman furnished in hospital bills was the fault of the public or of funeral directors who might be taking advantage of the public.

Dr. Baldamus seemed to feel that in many instances the public is to blame for high costs because in individuals seem to demand bigger and better things all the time. Also, people generally do not buy until they feel the goods cost a lot more than they are worth. Then they do not return the product or equipment purchased, and they usually make the purchase with little knowledge of the subject.

Realm Of Professors

Dr. Edward C. Donnell

Donnell, chairman of the accounting department, and its adviser will attend an all-day meeting at Ohio State University on Saturday, April 25. The meeting is in the Ohio Regional Meeting of the American Accounting Association. Dr. Donnell is chairman of two major features of death. First, there is some concept of immortality; secondly, there is a selfish disposal of the dead.

The importance of funerals in the United States was the subject of talks given by Drs. Albert C. Koenigsberg, assistant professor of education, and Dr. John T. Green, assistant professor of education. In many instances the public is to blame for high costs because in individuals seem to demand bigger and better things all the time.
