saga needs input

The confusion once surrounding the future of the Student Government Association (SGA) has been cleared up.

Student government on campus will remain in its present form, Student Government Association President Jim Hathaway said Wednesday.

Dr. Moore ruled Wednesday the recent referendum election held to determine the fate of SGA would be invalid.

There is no reason to hold another election on the SGA issue, the mayor said. Instead, SGA will remain as the present form.

Hathaway, SGA president, has promised to try to get student input and involvement in SGA. Now that he has the positive directive of the mayor, Hathaway should start immediate discussions with the students to be served.

While some students who strongly voiced their opinions on student government can now help to make SGA more effective and functional, the new SGA will not be what some students expected.

The turmoil concerning SGA is over. Students must realize that they can still offer assistance to student government and begin to work together.

WASHINGTON—Despite increasing numbers of disclosures, public officials are still unwilling to make their personal financial disclosure by public officials, Dr. William H. Moore, director of the State Department of Finance, said Monday.

"We have had a disclosure bill that has been before the legislature for several years of its presidency because of high salaries paid to public employees," Dr. Moore said.

"If the disclosure bill was not passed last year, it will not be passed this year," he added.

On campus pizzeria creates controversy

Dr. Rich Supranow Staff Reporter

The idea of placing a pizzeria on campus, supported by the Student Government Association, will be met with opposition from Bowling Green pizza shops, according to the president of the group. There is also a step to paying in advance for food in Loomis.

Lili Liss, Food Services manager, said that if the University establishes a pizzeria on campus, it would also be a way to compete for the overall student market. Liss said it "wouldn't be too worried about it if the pizza was the same quality as the food in the cafeteria here at the University." But Edward ODonnell, Food Services manager, said that the pizzeria would be "in an area where there is no competition, this might further hurt tax dollars." He said the new service is a "definite possibility." Liss said that the plan would be accepted in the pizzeria but added that it would be "for only a small step" for the University to decide to allow the use of space.

The idea of placing a pizza parlor on campus, according to Mary Lou Bennett, is nothing but a "good business for the University." Bennett said, "I believe this is illegal." One court test would be needed to settle the legal issue of this or a similar case. ODonnell said that this is a "definite possibility." Liss said that the plan would be accepted in the pizzeria but added that it would be "for only a small step" for the University to decide to allow the use of space.

According to Dr. Fundaburk, associate professor of economics at the University, and Denise A. Daffy, a recent Bowling Green graduate, "women's party until we try to organize a new party to get five per cent of the vote in the first presidential election."

However, she said, "We don't know how to impact the success of a women's party nationwide." According to Dr. Fundaburk, a general platform for the party should write to P.O. Box 55, 1,300 Main St. (The Beta House) • Air Conditioned

The formation of a new political party is something the Women's Party is currently undertaking. In fact, the party members include chairperson Dr. E. Lida Fundaburk, associate professor of economics at the University, and Denise A. Daffy, a recent Bowling Green graduate. The new party is being formed for the purpose of providing women, and men who support the platform, with a political voice. Daffy has worked closely with the organizer of the party, according to Dr. Fundaburk. Independent candidates usually have greater difficulties because they must run and they are generally opposed by the media, she added.

For instance, to be placed on the ballot in Ohio, independent candidates must file five times more signatures than party candidates are required to petition, she explained. The current issue is to get the platform and the party name accepted. She said, "Women simply don't have enough money available to them despite their beliefs that there are wealthy women in positions of power in this country. We added a platform which is not limited to women's issues. According to Dr. Fundaburk, the platform is "calling for a host of programs including full employment, public mass transportation, equal opportunity, formal reform and tax laws, and tax reform."

According to the subcommittee's reports, enough physical damage has been done to the nation's largest school. The subcommittee's reports are available for $5.00. Blood donations are very much appreciated, according to Mary Lou Bennett, who yesterday received "excellent response." She said, "We don't know how to impact the success of a women's party nationwide." According to Dr. Fundaburk, a general platform for the party should write to P.O. Box 55, 1,300 Main St.

NEW PROGRAM OFFERS PRISON ALTERNATIVE

WASHINGTON (AP) - With a few friends, a lot of faith and not much money, George Mische has set out to prove that locking up criminals is the wrong way to go about reducing crime.

After two years of planning, Mische's organization is ready to open a model prison later this week. The prison will train inmates about court procedures, drug treatment, responsible wage-earning and rent-free housing for former convicts.

Mische knows about the experience of war because his father was a U.S. serviceman in Colombia. Mische decided to design a prison that would protect the war veterans from being sent to another war.

"We've tried to do good organizations where the staff gets just 800-00 a year and there are no real benefits from 1060 people to try to help," Mische said.

"We felt that we could create an alternative."

When Mische was released from the federal penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., he formed the National Neighborhoods for Justice under Law and began the search for members of different backgrounds to work with him.

Mische discussed the first program which began recently in Washington and others are to be opened in the next few months in Gary, Ind., Los Angeles and New Orleans.

The committee and individuals who are poor and have no job skills and who have "committed a type of crime where no citizen was physically injured," are eligible for the program.

The committee will ask the courts to place certain prisoners in the committee's custody for three years. Mische said District of Columbia judges have reviewed favorably the program.

"One of the treatments' entirely will be seen as rewards.

The program, based on the national median income, range from 3,000 per year for a single person to $2,400 for a family of five. Mische said he has his staff paid at the same rate.

A recent committee newsletter noted that 90 per cent of inmates in a typical state prison served one year or less for rape, and for assault, not for murder, but for stealing. Some states have minimum sentences of 10 years.

Mische expects to need $8,000,000 for the year's operation and predicts the operation will be self-supporting within two years as tax revenues and hiring contracts.

Spokesman discusses U.N.'s role

By Renee Maszalki

There is simply no substitute for the United Nations, said J. C. Kittani, executive assistant to the Secretary General of the U.N. "The U.N. is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

Kittani, a native of Iraq, attended the United Nations University, became an international student at the University of Hawaii, and returned to the U.N. as part of the International Work experience program. "There are no wars of looking back on this," he said. "There are no solutions for problems that are worldwide."

"NEXT YEAR, the World Student Association is planning a worldwide celebration of the United Nations and there will be many such celebrations throughout the city. However, it is important to realize that many people do not know what the United Nations is," said Kittani.

"In the future, the U.N. is never intended to be a substitute for bilateral relations between nations," said Kittani. "The United Nations is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

"The U.N. is never intended to be a substitute for bilateral relations between nations," said Kittani. "The United Nations is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

The theory that the U.N. has no power in an international issue is exaggerated, according to Kittani. "The U.N. is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

"The U.N. is never intended to be a substitute for bilateral relations between nations," said Kittani. "The United Nations is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

Kittani went on to say that some issues facing the world are directly related to underrepresentation and a shrinking food supply.

"The U.N. is never intended to be a substitute for bilateral relations between nations," said Kittani. "The United Nations is the only institution where individuals or nations can bring their differences to a peaceful and just solution."

Community input sought

A new angle to the Conversations program at the Newman Center was initiated this week when the Newman Center for All offered to sponsor the U.N. program to clarify the refugee situation. The program, which is being conducted by the U.S. government and is structured around eight topics, will continue until the end of the week.

Sponsored by the Catholic Bishops of the United States, the program is designed to educate and inform the public about the United Nations. "The Newman Center's Conversations program is designed for participants to stimulate their own thinking and to consider the concepts of liberty and justice," according to Ismat T. Kittani, executive assistant to the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Kittani went on to say that some issues facing the world are directly related to underrepresentation and a shrinking food supply.

Course work outside of the classroom is designed to help students learn new things and develop new skills. However, many students find that the classroom environment is very structured and limiting.

"The classroom is a place where people are forced to learn," said Toalston. "The classroom is not the only place where people learn. People learn in many different ways." Toalston went on to say that some issues facing the world are directly related to underrepresentation and a shrinking food supply.
