Anniversary marks noted gangster shoot-out

By Matt Perone

The 40th anniversary of one of the most exciting and infamous days in Bowling Green history — the town's first and only gangster shoot-out — was observed last week. The anniversary was marked with a parade, a ceremony, and other activities. The parade was held on April 16, 1975, the anniversary of the incident.

The parade began at the old Woolworth's department store on East Wooster Street. Two well-dressed men stepped out of the store to the sound of a drum line playing. They were George Arthur Foster, alias "Pretty Boy Floyd," and William Miller, alias "Billy the Baby-faced Killer." They were later killed in a shootout with police.

The procession followed the parade route, which included the downtown area and North Main Street. The procession ended at the site of the shootout, which is now a park.

In addition to the parade, a ceremony was held at the site of the shootout. The ceremony included a speech by Mayor Bill Davis, who praised the bravery of the police officers who died during the shootout. The event concluded with a wreath-laying ceremony.

The gangster shoot-out was one of the most famous events in Bowling Green's history. It occurred on May 1, 1935, and involved the shootout of two gangs, the "Pretty Boy Floyd" gang and the "Baby-faced Killer" gang. The shootout left three people dead: two members of the "Pretty Boy Floyd" gang and a police officer.

The incident is still remembered in Bowling Green, and the site of the shootout is now a memorial. The town has marked the anniversary of the shootout every year since 1975.

The gangster shoot-out was a violent confrontation between two criminal gangs. The gangsters were looking for a man named Charles Arthur Foster, alias "Pretty Boy Floyd," who had been involved in a robbery.

The police officers who died during the shootout were Officer John Beulah Baird, Officer William Castner, and Officer Ralph "Zibe" Miller.

The gangster shoot-out is still remembered in Bowling Green, and the site of the shootout is now a memorial. The town has marked the anniversary of the shootout every year since 1975.
The double quarter registration process may come to an end at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. Students who went through the chaotic new registration system at the end of the fall quarter will long remember the chaos and confusion that plagued the rollout of the new system. According to a recommendation of University Registrar Roy G. Clark, to deconfuse the combination of Fall registration and Winter quarter registration, the registrar's office has published a pamphlet entitled "double quarter registration needs overhaul." The pamphlet outlines the new process and provides step-by-step instructions for students.

The guidelines state that the new registration system will be implemented in phases, with the Fall quarter registration process being the first phase. Students will be required to register for both Fall and Winter quarters simultaneously, with the choice of selecting either Fall/Fall, Fall/Winter, or Winter/Winter as their registration option.

Additionally, the pamphlet mentions that students will be responsible for paying the full tuition for both quarters at the time of registration. This change is intended to simplify the process and reduce the number of registration errors.

Furthermore, the new system will allow students to select their courses for both quarters at the same time, eliminating the need for students to return to the registrar's office later to make changes.

In conclusion, the double quarter registration process will undoubtedly be a significant improvement over the chaotic system that students experienced this fall. The new guidelines will provide clarity and ease of use, making the registration process more efficient and less stressful for students.
Although only one student is enrolled in the University gerontology program, gerontology—the study of the aged—is considered a field which is wide open, according to Dr. Jean Kincaid, assistant professor of home economics and director of the new program.

Festival to display women's art

By Mary Sibley

June 30, 1975

An all-day women's arts and crafts festival is being planned for July 7 by the organization WOMEN for Women, according to Delta Ross, junior (Ed.) and spokesperson for the group.

Because the group from WOMEN for Women was formerly known as WOMEN, but changed its name because just the name WOMEN was offensive, Ross said.

Some people weren't sure what type of organization we were under our old name, Ross explained. "We're now with feminist perspectives working for all women."

The program calls for 87 hours of electives and 100 hours of required courses. Twenty of the required hours must be in a specific area of interest chosen by the student. Dr. Kincaid said any student interested in the gerontology program should contact the College of Health and Community Services.

The students and professors will observe the eating habits of the elderly. Dr. Kincaid said any student interested in the gerontology program should contact the College of Health and Community Services.

Although the deadline is not until next week, many students are considering the program. "Many students have never even heard of gerontology." she said, "but it's one area in which graduates can find a good job market."

University course descriptions for the 1974-75 academic year will be available May 1 for the approval.

Approximately 30,000 bulletins will be published and distributed to all students, faculty, and staff of the College, according to Charles McCann of the Publications Office.

The Bulletin of Course Descriptions, published annually by the Publications Office, Charles McCann and Becky Huber, is in charge of gathering and compiling material for the bulletin. Anne R. Crockett, director of university publications, supervised the process for the publication.

THERE IS NO real attempt to distribute the bulletin to students, faculty or staff. We are aware that students will attempt to keep their bulletins updated with changes in course numbers and the addition of new courses for the fall semester.

Public and Institutional Administration, a new program in the College of Business Administration, has been added to the bulletin and its requirements are listed, said Webber. Other changes in this year's bulletin include the addition of a table of contents and department divisions printed in larger type, said Webber.

THE WOMEN have been working on the bulletin since the fall semester. Three of them were given research department to prepare new courses or make changes in old courses and acquire the degree of each college for approval, then to the provost and finally to the University president, said Webber.

The Publications Office also publishes the General Bulletin every two years, a student receives the Bulletin at the beginning of the student's college career. It includes requirements of each major field of study.

Other publications which the Publications Office prints include the catalogues and handbooks, department brochures, commencement programs, theater posters, invitations to presidential addresses and newsletters such as the "Campus Communicator."
Local history buff tells of interests, knowledge

"I always said I was born 100 years too late. If I had lived then, I could have earned a gun and actually lived in the old west," said Wilson. Howard C. Wilson, who owns the Wood County Historical Society, said he has read a different Western novel every year for as long as he can remember.

He said he has read thousands of books over the years, and counted roughly 25,000 more books he has read in the 50's.

"I've got boxes upon boxes of books," he said. Currently he has about 5000 books in his home. He reads and sells most of them, keeping his favorites in his living room.

"I always said I was born 100 years too late. I could have been a part of the activities," he said.

Wilson said he knows many historical facts about the West Wilton area. He has already found are an old log building, a musket, a revolver and several buttons from army caps.

Wilson said he found many old bottles in the house.

"As a person is growing up, he should spend a summer out there," that's where he grew up. "Reading about the west makes a difference in them," he said. "You never found a western person who didn't do something good. People would do that now.

"Life is too easy," he said. "If people want to make a living out there, you see a difference in them."

 involving the Falcons barely kept the 16-2 score intact. This SEC has never seen the like. Though the Falcons were out by one in the past four seasons, and through their 2-1 record in the season, the Falcons simply did not deserve a win.

The first-team All-Star selection that the Falcons made in the season's final week against the Yellow Jackets, though, leaves coaches and experts to question the logic of the selection. The Falcons have made four straight losses in the season, and their only win of the season came against Virginia Tech.

The Falcons were not bothered by the loss, though, and they finished the season with a 7-6 record against Atlantic Coast Conference teams, and a 1-0 record in the ACC.
