The University Board of Trustees last Thursday approved a $1 annual increase in the student fees for the upcoming academic year. Of this amount, $0.50 was voted for construction and $0.50 for the costs of operating the Student Recreational Center.

Is the rec center worth $1 a year, students were wondering? "I don't know if the increase is justified," one student said. "I don't think you will get your money's worth from the facility."

On the other hand, students expressed mixed reactions from 10 students who responded. Five students said they thought the cost increase was justified. Three said they would rent a gym elsewhere and the rest said they were indifferent.

Robert B. Miller, professor of chemistry and president of the Board of Trustees, said, "It is the feeling in the department that the increase is justified."

According to Dr. Richard W. Bowers, professor of health and physical education, the added costs of operating the facility should not be blamed on the facility itself, rather than by using student fees.

Rally for Honey planed

A rally and march have been scheduled for tomorrow to mark the 40th anniversary of the Honey's attempt for a four-day weekend. "The rally and march are intended to show support and involvement in the University's efforts," said Bill. Bowers, professor of chemistry and president of the University chapter of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

Blinn said that the AUP, an organization designed to protest the "procrastination" of the policy, is the only group fighting the increase. "I don't think it should be spread out to the students that one department is raising the fees and they're really going to be bearing the brunt of it," he said.

ALWAYS

"The university is being used as a scapegoat," Bowers said. "I don't think there's any problem in the AUP's policy."

The Honey's increase will increase to $35 a year, which is the highest among the departments. "The problem is that they want to raise it really big and they're really going to be bearing the brunt of it," he said. "I don't fully support it.""Blinn

Mark Tanks, a junior, said, "It should be a gradual increase. Lots of students can't afford to as- sist the University as it is. But everyone's going to benefit from the rec center. We all pay to use the gym and we all pay a fee to go to another course to raise fees."

Inside the News

THE NEWS thinks the idea of an all-out student- body is a good one. Our opinion appears on page 4.

The Board of Trustees' approval of a $1 fee increase does not seem to have taken into account the determination of students to determine salary increases or cuts in the 10 departments that the AUP hopes to negotiate issues with. "The University as it is. Not the building, but the whole University as it is."

The AUP hopes that by working with the university, they can avoid the "procrastination" of the policy. "The Honey's increase will increase to $35 a year, which is the highest among the departments. take our advice

University President S. Arthur Spiegel at last Thursday's board meeting broke the bad news that establishing an ombudsman's office has to delay our students on course changes and other concerns. The News thinks that's a good idea.

Bill Schabel says he's working to make the SGA election fair. It is an idea of accommodating enough students on the SGA. It is an idea of making sure that students who have already voted in the SGA election will have a say. It is an idea of making sure that students who have already voted in the SGA election will have a say.

Either the ombudsman's office must be created or faculty must be made aware of the dangers of voting. The power to do this means the difference between money well-spent and...
Counsel links alumni with faculty

By Rob Wilkins

What do the vice presidents of Boeing International Operations, the WorldWide and General Electric Co., one who heads a Toledo television station and a photographer from a French television station have in common? They are alumni of the University of Akron.

They, along with many others, are seeking to select five student and five faculty members to serve as council members, she said.

"I AM QUITE happy with the situation as it is now. I don't think the student body as its voice on the board."

Council links alumni with faculty

By Bob Wilkins

"BASICALLY, the program provides faculty with a sounding board in which to work from," Hill said.

Three University alumni advisory boards are involved with the College of Business, the College of Speech and Communications and the School of Journalism.

"We are in the process of forming an advisory board with the College of Arts and Sciences and are putting together a special council for Technical Communications and the School of Engineering," Hill said.

Both faculty and alumni council members view the program as a way to have communication ideas.

"There may be a possible conflict of interest, but there are so many issues that come up; there's always a valuable input. You can abstain, as many board members do, if an issue would be a conflict of interest," Newman said.

"We have kicked around the idea of picking up the appointment of professor emeritus as a full voting member. He would be a faculty member with no voting interest in salary, but there are so many issues that come up; there's always a valuable input. You can abstain, as many board members do, if an issue would be a conflict of interest," Newman said.

Alumni and faculty

"The Alumni and faculty plans a day for each of the departments in the spring and fall for a meeting."

The meeting is held once a month in the spring and fall for a meeting. The meeting includes an agenda on what the department and faculty and college and chair do the things they want to have them," Hill said.

"It is a tremendously valuable thing, Hill said. "We have a certain direction going between our college and the college, but we need to be heard on many things."

Panama Canal treaty approved; passage marks Carter victory

The Senate approved the last of two Panama Canal treaties yesterday, giving President Carter a narrow but crucial victory.

The vote was 50-40, the same margins by which the Senate approved the first treaty as March 16. The margin of victory was only one more than the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution.

The vote was 36-16, with 22 Republicans voting against final passage of the treaties, which President Carter had signed into law.

The treaties provide for an international zone around the Panama Canal, a crucial link in the global shipping network, and for the United States to withdraw its troops from the area.

The treaties also provide for a 50-year lease to the United States of the Panama Canal, which will be administered by the United States until the year 2099.

Glen Johnson's tennis coach didn't expect him to be an exceptional player after his first pickup at age 12 years ago in Port Huron, Michigan.

"No doubt, he could have been a top-notch tennis player," said Johnson's former coach and tennis director at the Port Huron Country Club. Johnson's winning record of 43-3 was named to the All-American team.

Johnson's passion for tennis stems from his childhood, where he spent countless hours honing his skills on the courts. His dedication and hard work paid off, and he was recognized for his exceptional performance.

As the season progressed, Johnson's skills continued to improve. His success in tournaments and competitions further solidified his place as one of the top players in the country.

With the NCAA bid in sight, Johnson's focus remained on the team. He understood the importance of collaboration and the collective effort required to achieve success.

"I never thought I'd see a team's warmth," said Johnson. "The team's support and camaraderie have been invaluable in my journey towards excellence in tennis."

After winning the NCAA bid, Johnson's team will advance to the national championships, where they will face top-tier competition. With the support of his team and the home crowd, Johnson is optimistic about his team's prospects.

The upcoming tournaments will provide valuable learning experiences for Johnson and his teammates as they aim to bring home the championship.
