A general meeting of the University faculty has been called for April 4 to discuss a number of issues relating to faculty restructuring, according to the Board of Trustees.

The meeting was scheduled in response to a letter written by staff members to the university's president, Dr. Paul Olscamp, in which they expressed their concerns about changes in the university's structure.

Faculty senate had planned to discuss the concerns at a meeting spaced for that day, but that the letter requested some changes be made in planning to attend the Senate meeting on April 4, the university's president said.

According to a resolution to be considered during this week's meeting, the university's board of trustees will discuss the need for a faculty meeting to address the concerns raised by the faculty senate and the university's president.

A resolution is also included to consider the university's president and the faculty senate's request to convene a meeting to discuss the concerns raised by the faculty senate and the university's president.

In past years, student government has come under a lot of criticism. Unfortunately, perhaps, much of that criticism was justifiable.

But now, students are represented by a group with a new name and a new constitution — the Undergraduate Student Government.

USG held its first meeting of the quarter last night and summarized its plans and concerns for the coming quarter. Its concerns should be the concerns of the students, and they appear to be:

- The University's financial plight, the question of tuition, the sit-in, Election Action and the annual peer advising program are all, at least in theory, available and student-oriented.

And, like many of his peers and faculty, USG president Bruce Johnson took a strong stand on the regents last night, while voicing his support of Interim President Dr. Michael Ferrari.

USG is taking a step in extending an invitation to the new president, Dr. Paul Olsan, to meet with it.

Part of the dilemma faced by University student government has been the limitations placed upon it. It cannot allocate funds; it has no representative on the Board of Trustees; therefore, it is shackled in the kinds of services it realistically can provide.

With elections coming soon, it is imperative that this group, once again, be given at least a chance to prove itself before it is condemned.

Hopefully, it won't let us down this time.
Computer theft foiled by detection methods

by Linda Perez

There is a reason why Dr. Richard Conrad, manager of computer services, projects a greater-than-average confidence in the ability of his department to track down and identify unauthorized use of the University's computer system.

"We haven't had any complaints," Conrad said yesterday.

He defined the computer service's purpose as playing the "ultimate custodian," protecting the security and confidentiality of information stored in the University's computer system.

Although the established safeguarding measures are not perfect, said, the most recent computer break-ins - involving a University student - were the first to be reported within the past year.

"People aren't aware of the seriousness of the problem," Conrad declared further, "but I feel we have pretty good measures in place to protect the University's computer system." He added that guarding measures are not perfect, but he is committed to improving them.

The Energy Task Force's "Brown Out," held late last quarter, resulted in a 6.5 percent reduction in electrical energy usage, according to results compiled by Linda Perez, coordinator, said Tuesday.

"I won't tell you it doesn't happen," Conrad said, explaining that computer break-ins occasionally are a problem. They can occur for a variety of reasons, such as unauthorized access to information for which he is not authorized to look at other individuals. He explained that the task force is working to improve this situation.

"A person working at the registrar or the library office and requested their file be opened, he said. "There's a very thin line." He stated that the task force is working to improve this situation.

"But if it's something else, like 'Gee I want to use for this class,' Conrad said. "If I use this number for a purpose it was not intended for (class use only) if say I plan to use certain information stored in the computer to run a series of five-syllable charts to sell, then I'm committing a crime."

Conrad said he is committed to improving the situation. He explained that the task force is working to improve this situation.

Task force 'Brown Out' project reduces University energy costs

Brief!

The result of the project - a 6.5 percent reduction in electrical energy usage - comes from a computer, according to results compiled by Linda Perez, coordinator, said Tuesday.

They can occur for a variety of reasons, such as unauthorized access to information for which he is not authorized to look at other individuals. He explained that the task force is working to improve this situation.

"A person working at the registrar or the library office and requested their file be opened, he said. "There's a very thin line." He stated that the task force is working to improve this situation.

Brown Out was 1,860 hours - a 6.5 percent reduction in demand hours during the highest energy usage for the month, he explained. An energy charge is determined by the total kilowatt hours used each month, he explained.

The goal of the project simply was to alert students to the potential for energy reduction, Veroski said. A reduction goal was set.

The Energy Task Force has distributed questionnaires to get reactions to the Brown Out. The questionnaires were sent randomly to all students.

"People aren't aware of the seriousness of the problem," Conrad declared further, "but I feel we have pretty good measures in place to protect the University's computer system."

The legislation, which had its first meeting of the quarter, lasted just over an hour. The meeting was held at a Dvorak, a room located in the Corngaden Union, which could benefit University students.

Problems that the students and University alike face because of budget cuts are being examined by the organization.

"We're trying to get a stale representation of people who love our University," said Amy Sadow, a junior speech comm., who attended the meeting.

Police find more bodies in Florida

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) - Eleven more bodies believed to be Haitian refugees washed ashore on a naked, battered bodies that were identified as refugees from the Haitian Freighter were found along a secluded stretch of gold beaches in Broward County last Sunday.

Pilot had identified 11 bodies by make, model, and was investigating the four reported sightings.

Authority was unsure whether the plane that crashed on Tuesday but recovered were identified as washed ashore yesterday.

Because of shifting cur- rents, bodies from the Ocean Beaches washed ashore, authorities said.

They're popping up all over now," said Hills-

The Coast Guard speculated that earnings on the Haitian Freighter had ex- plored by a local group of Coast Guardsmen in the Bahama Islands early Sunday.

The survivors, how- ever, must all work there for the bodies to score.

With all known survi- ours, there are about 200 bodies, the Coast Guard speculated.

Nuclear reduction negotiations see no progress

WASHINGTON (AP) - Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger said Friday that the U.S. and the Soviet Union have not made any significant progress in their ongoing nuclear arms negotiations. Weinberger said there were several discrepancies.

He said that he had been told by senior arms control officials yesterday that the U.S. and the Soviet Union are not coordinating their efforts on the reduction of strategic nuclear weapons. Weinberger said that the U.S. and the Soviet Union have been working on a variety of issues related to nuclear weapons, including the development of new weapons and the reduction of existing arsenals.

Now And Forever
A bridal supplement to the BG News
Most couples contemplating marriage are unaware of the legal aspects of holy matrimony, says Dr. Kathleen Campbell, professor of home economics. Some marriage laws on the books right now are obsolete.

No doubt about it, getting married can really be a harrowing experience for a guy.

There are many, many options open to a couple in planning their wedding ceremony, says Father John Blase of St. Thomas More church. Tailoring the ceremony can make a beautiful day even more special.

Money is always a factor in planning a honeymoon, says Kelly Zenz, office manager for AAA Worldwide Travel Service, and that goes whether you plan a short vacation in Michigan or a trip around the world.
Wedding fashions romantic, youthful

by Becky Brooks writer emeritus

Without a doubt, the royal wedding of the Prince of Wales to Lady Diana Spencer July 29, 1981 has had an effect on the bridal fashions this year.

Weddings styles this spring are more youthful and romantic than in recent years, Susan Hilton, one of the owners of the House of Hilton Bridal Shoppe in Toledo, said. Traditional and classic are the best words to describe the styles and materials of bridal gowns.

Although the royal wedding dress was ivory silk taffeta, most wedding dresses are still in white and vary in style befitting of the bride. Many dresses are adorned with ruffles, as was the wedding dress of the Princess of Wales. Others, though, are covered ornately with delicate lace.

BRIDES are also wearing the puffy sleeves, and the full skirts which are being made into ballroom style bridal gowns with underskirts and hoops. This trend also seems to follow the dress pattern of Princess Diana which is the present trend in both the wedding dresses and bridesmaids' gowns.

For the bridesmaids' gowns, soft shades of rose are the most popular colors as well as other pastels for this spring and summer. These colors go well with the popular silver and gray tuxedos for the groom and his party, Hilton said.

The favorite materials for bridal gowns are chiffons, organzas and some taffetas, which are traditional fabrics, according to Hilton.

"There seems to be more veils this year," she added, saying that in the past few years, hats were the most popular headwear for the bride. The veils follow the traditional style of wedding fashion which is evident in the other bridal fashion.

MEN'S fashions are also going to the traditional, classic look with the wing collar, the classic cutaway, or the gray ascot, Jeff Kiefer, area manager at Formal Man in the Southwyck Mall, said. He said the colors are also traditional for the groom this year.

He, too, said that gray and silver, which match best with the most popular bridal fashions, are among the most popular colors in tuxedos.

He said that men usually give the brides their way in the tuxedo selection. "Most of them say fine, they'll wear whatever, but there are men who pick out their own."

"Most guys have the opinion that whatever you (the bride) pick out, I'll wear," Hilton said, adding that most grooms are fairly understanding about the problems the bride has with getting her bridesmaids fitted. Most grooms don't want to cause any more hassles for their brides, she said. The bride will usually pick out two or three styles and the groom will choose from those.

"It's tough enough as it is,"he said. "In almost every case,in fact I would say in every case the approach is more conservative than you would find in a catalog."

Birth control allows new family planning

by organiomo copy editor

At one time having babies was the next logical step after marriage.But now more couples are choosing to wait a few years before having children,or choosing not to have any.

Changing attitudes and options have practically eliminated the thought of a marriage must include children,or choosing not to have any.

Couples should consider their grandparents,"Wilkins said,because not all grandparents are able to come to the wedding.

Fifteen to 20 people looked on as a couple exchanged vows,kissed and walked down the aisle of the church.But the small group of onlookers were not actually in the church,they were watching a video taped wedding at the Fashion Merchandising Association Bridal and Spring Fashion show and exhibit on Feb. 25.

THE CONDOM is an easy, fairly effective method of birth control, and it is even more effective when used with spermicidal cream or jelly.A beneficial side effect of the condom is that it protects against venereal disease.

Vaginal foams,creams,jellies and suppositories work sometimes, but may still be used even after the condom is taken out, according to the pamphlet.

Withdrawal is a popular method of birth control, but it can be very unreliable at times it works and sometimes it doesn't.

The pamphlet points out that withdrawal leaves a tremendous amount of willpower.

The rhythm method has been gaining popularity among those who don't wish to use chemical or physical means of birth control, according to the pamphlet.But according to the rhythm method correctly, one must be willing to do a lot of accurate record-keeping and an accurate reckoning, as well as have the proper medical guidance,determination and will power,said the pamphlet.

THE MOST EFFECTIVE method of birth control is sterilization. This is still considered irreversible, however,so a person must be sure they do not want children after the operation.

Both operations, vasectomy for men and tubal ligation for women, are fairly simple anymore, according to Planned Parenthood. A vasectomy involves severing and tying the vas deferens in the male who don't wish to use chemical or physical means of birth control, according to the pamphlet. But according to the rhythm method correctly, one must be willing to do a lot of accurate record-keeping and an accurate reckoning, as well as have the proper medical guidance, determination and will power, said the pamphlet.

THE MOST EFFECTIVE method of birth control is sterilization. This is still considered irreversible, however, so a person must be sure they do not want children after the operation.

The pamphlet points out that there are several popular methods of birth control that aren't really methods at all-they're myths, and relying on them for protection, according to Planned Parenthood, is a big mistake.

Douching, breast-feeding and other methods are not really methods at all, according to Planned Parenthood. They do not work, said the pamphlet.

Anyone wanting more information about birth control options should talk to a doctor at the Health Center or contact the local Planned Parenthood chapter.
Counseling before marriage helps couples communicate by Sue Garguilo, writer emeritus

Pre-marital counseling is an opportunity for engaged couples to grow if they are open and willing to use the opportunity to their benefit, Pastor Edward Waldon Sr. of St. Mark’s Lutheran Church, said. Waldon said he talks about the wedding service, their relationship with each other and their families, financial matters, sex and communication.

Pastor John Blaser, of St. Thomas More University Parish, said his parish has a two-day marriage preparation program which is mandatory. The program, which includes 12 couples participating, begins Friday from 7:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. and continues Saturday from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. “Last year we had 350 couples (total),” Blaser said. Four programs, one of which is filled, are offered spring quarter.

“The key is not to go heavy on instruction but more of a witness approach where married couples share their experiences,” Blaser said, adding that this is the best quality of the program.

Pastor Frank Ellis of Trinity United Methodist Church said pre-marriage counseling is beneficial in opening the lines of communication between the couple by raising issues they haven’t talked about.

Ellis said he invites an engaged and has problems,” Imbrie, who married 14 couples last year, said.

It is 11:05 a.m. on a Sunday morning and all is still at Prout Chapel. Usually a mid-March sky is heavy, gray and swollen; a mid-March earth, barren and rugged. But the sky is a bright splash of blue this day and the grass is beginning to poke up through the earth.

Inside the chapel hints of April further beckon. Sprouting from the hearth play the simple grand piano, a flurry of yellow marigolds, purple veined irises and half-open white carnation, elevating the roles of quietness and how ethereal array, like a watercolor print. Shadows are deftly cast across nations, forming a sensuous yet somehow delicate, nonchalantly accepting Barb's mother playing the role of handmaid, the bride and the bride in the tiny sun-filled room, with the mother of the bride and the bride in a white woolen sweater and jeans, smiling and laughing while her grandmother fusses about her, encouraging tier that she really should wear the leotards; they would be more appropriate for Barb's wedding. Peggy resists any move to help her dress, but darts about self-sufficiently, peeling off her dress, donning instead a pale blue gown and navy blue kneesocks raveling down her legs. Rambling through the bag, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant bag, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant, she pulls up a pair of white pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant.

"I can't get my necklace on, I'm so nervous," the grandmother says. Then with an odd little pucker about her lips, she sighs. "At least that Protestant chaplain puts you at ease."

The bride's mother is considerably more calm than the grandmother. "I'm doing fine," she says, "although I expect I'll get worse a bit later, perhaps during the wedding ceremony."

THERE'S a flutter at the door, and the sound of women's voices chattering on familiar topics of everyday life. Barb Ryder has arrived, and is talking with the flutist and harpist who will play the wedding music. Dressed in a white woolen sweater and jeans, her voice unfaUtering, even confident, she betrays no obvious signs of nervousness. As her mother says, by way of explanation, she was at work at Kaufman's restaurant the entire morning. "I always say the bride is the least nervous of all," Barb says, popping a Certs into her mouth as she steps from the vestibule area to the small dressing room at the back of the chapel. "I've been to six weddings so have I have the shakes? I'm not nervous, other than the fact that I got up at 7:00 in the morning when I usually get up at 10:00."

There's a lot of fussing and primping in the tiny sun-filled room, with the mother of the bride and the bride changing their clothes, and the grandmother playing the role of handmaid, nonchalantly accepting Barb's jeans and blouse, rambling comfortably about pantyhose and ni-dry deodorant. "Am I zipped? I thought I felt a little air," Barb jokes, her fingers combing through her thick French locks as if to straighten any wisp of hair out of place. "I guess it doesn't look too bad after all."

IN HER IVORY wedding dress, it's hard to remember that a few minutes ago this young woman had been complaining of a runny nose that had kept her up the past night; that she had been praying since the day before for this day to get over with. Time, money affect travel

by Mary Barnes copy editor

Time and budget are the most important considerations when planning a honeymoon trip. "When we know the budget, we work from there," said Kellie Zenz, Office Manager for AAA World Wide Travel Service, 414 E. Wooster St. Zenz said this is an especially important consideration for college students on a tight budget.

Zenz said a honeymoon can be anything from a weekend at a ski resort in Michigan to a cruise. "If a couple does not have much money, they'll take something short," she said. Another important consideration is the couple's personalities. "We try to find out if the couple is outdoorsy, so we won't send them someplace fancy," Zenz said. She said, "Usually a couple will have at least half an idea of where they want to go before they come in to plan a trip."

ZENZ SAID Florida is always a popular spot for a honeymoon, especially at this time of year when people want to get away from the cold weather. She said Niagara Falls is still a popular spot for honeymooners. But Zenz said by far cruises are becoming the most popular honeymoon option.

"Cruises are becoming more affordable," she said, and can be made even more affordable by booking a less expensive cabin and booking early.

Zenz said travel agents can make a honeymoon more affordable because they know about specials. "Mexico is a good place to go right now because the value of the peso is low," she said.

DIANA GAMBLE, travel consultant with Holiday Travel Center, 140 N. Main St., agrees that cruises are becoming the most popular choice for honeymooning couples. She said one reason is that everything is included in the cruise and the cruise package can be geared to each couple's individual interests.

Gamble, however, said she does not see the economy affecting honeymoon travel plans. "Most couples save for their honeymoons so cost doesn't affect their plans," Gamble said. The cost of the average cruise ranges from $1,000 per person to $3,000, depending on the length of the cruise, the number of ports visited and the quality of the ship.

GAMBLE SAID one advantage of making travel arrangements through a travel agent is that travel consultants receive feedback on trips from other travelers. She said because of this she has a "pretty good idea" what would please honeymooning couples.

Gamble advises honeymooners to check out different tour packages carefully and to read travel brochures thoroughly.

Both Gamble and Zenz advise couples to plan ahead and make travel arrangements as far in advance as possible. Zenz said in matter where the destination, the best advice she can give to honeymooners on a budget is to look travel arrangements early.
It's the law: Couples uninfomed of marriage legalitiies

by Kathleen Kosnar assistant editor

"You never get to see the rules of the game," said Dr. Kathleen Campbell, a home economics professor who teaches marriage and family courses at the University of Illinois.

While both men and women enter marriage with a legal allowance to provide economic support, for children, the courts do housework and where they will live; they may even devise a legal contract outlining their marriage duties, but that contract would not withstand legal scrutiny if one partner contested the contract, Campbell explained.

"THEY TALK about those things but I don't think they realize there is a legal precedent set for the role of the family," Campbell said, that has defined about 2,000 years of Christian law in Western society, as well as the head of the family and finances.

And all these laws remain on the legal books today, she said, they are archaic and inappropriate for the necessities of the 1980's, especially because men and women are uninformed about the legal aspects of a marriage license.

To get a marriage license, a couple must produce proof of their ages, blood test results when required (blood tests are not required in Ohio) and "sign a paper saying they have gotten rid of a first wife or husband," Campbell said, adding the couple signs a license without being informed of what the legal consequences are until the marriage runs into trouble.

The marriage laws that accompany a license are not written down on paper outside common law books, Campbell said. "The government is asking you to enter into a contract without ever getting to see that contract," she explained.

THE MARRIAGE laws that bother Campbell include "The man in the marriage is responsible for the basic economic support of his family. Why should a woman bother her?" Campbell said even if a couple had signed a contract that stated a woman would work outside the home and provide economic support, for example, if the husband remained in school, the man is legally responsible and could be forced to quit school to get a job if his wife contested. "He could say she promised (to work out the "clown home)." Campbell said, "but it wouldn't hold up in court."

And men and women must be available to each other for sexual contact, according to common marriage law. Campbell explained a law "weighted in favor of males because men can force women to have sex but women cannot force men to have sex."

Aside from sexual availability, women must also provide house and child care, Campbell said, and the critical factor is that it must be proved without pay. This law is not reasonable, she said, because 50 percent of married women work outside the home and legally are forced to work a second job as housekeeper and mother without pay.

THE WOMAN'S place is in the home, according to common marriage laws, unless a woman's husband decides to move, then Campbell said a domicile law makes it illegal for a wife not to follow. "If the husband leaves the state, you as a wife must go," she explained, or be charged with desertion.

The penalty for not following one husband could mean losing custody of children and rights to alimony payments or child support if the children stay. The same law applies if the woman wants to move; she is charged with desertion. "A husband could be charged only if he gets up and leaves without telling his family and doesn't return," she said.

If a couple decides to contract specific marriage guidelines and signs an agreement with a lawyer, Campbell said the only thing they would get out of the arrangement would be a good exercise in communication, the contract would not take precedence over laws already recognized by the government.

"Essentially it is an unwritten contract through which the government says 'this is the way it will be' and you can't take precedence over laws recognized by the government," she said.

CAMPBELL said there are many marriage laws discriminating against women-such as a French common marriage law. "About 10 years ago in Louisiana which ruled all property to belong to the husband even if bought with the wife's money—which are slowly changing. Passage of the Equal Rights Amendment could be a jolt to marriage common law.

Judges would be forced to review each case brought to court concerning marriages individually, Campbell said, and a wife's economic contribution of housekeeping and child care would have to be taken into consideration as well as the fact that some women are equally equipped financially and may be forced to make alimony payments to ex-husbands.

"Equal rights under the law would also force judges to examine the attributes of each spouse when determining who will get custody of the children, not who deserted whom. "For most couples (marriage) works out," Campbell said. "It's just annoying to know the laws are there and not going to back you up if you needed them."

Economics change marriage expectations

by Marilyn Rosinski News staff reporter

Getting a "MRS. DEGREE" is no longer the ultimate goal of female college students. Actually, men and women seek both the social life and career training aspects of college, Dr. Kathleen Campbell, a home economics professor at the University of Illinois, said. Later, these will lead to a partnership of similar background and interests, she added.

The ratio of American married couples is 50 percent, according to Department of Labor Statistics, the trend to postpone marriage continues. At the age the age goes up and the median age for first marriages is approaching 25 years for men and about 23 years for women, Dr. Campbell, sociology professor and population expert, said. "And, this is considerably past the typical graduation age," she added.

In Wood County 816 marriage licenses were issued in 1981. This number has remained consistent. The number of divorces has been 80 to 100 per year in the last 10 years, Campbell said.

WHILE BOTH men and women enter marriage with a romantic expectation for their lives together, they also live to have conflicting expectations that how they can best achieve 'that ideal,' Campbell said.

Ninety-six percent of the college students randomly surveyed in 1976 by sociologists Christopher and Sorensen expected to be married within a few years of graduation, she said.

Of the college men in the survey, 75 percent expected to have a wife with whom they would work for years after they were married, then they would begin raising a family with their wives as primary caretakers. These men do not return to the labor force until some arbitrary future time that the husband sees as optimum, such as when the children start school, Dr. Campbell said.

A majority of the college women expected marriage to provide economic support, a career foundation, and then planning a few years' delay in beginning their families. Then after a short absence, they planned to return to the labor force, the study said.

ECONOMIC considerations are already forcing men to back down from their hardline views and agree to their wives working, Campbell said.

"Couples accustomed to dual incomes have difficulty breaking away," Great said. Because of this increasing dependency, working partners are returning to work more frequently than ever.

Mothers of pre-school children (under 5 years old) represent the sharpest growth in the labor market this past decade, Great said.

And the quick return to work typically decreases the ultimate family size, he said. Working women are highly motivated to avoid an accidental pregnancy, he said. One or two children is the norm in dual career families, especially among college-educated partners who typically pursue a career rather than a job.

BECAUSE women are learning that employment continuity is a necessary element in career growth, Campbell said women are better equipped financially as well as the fact that some women are better equipped financially and may be forced to make alimony payments to ex-husbands.

"You never get to see the rules of the game," Campbell said. "The government says 'this is the way it will be' and you can't take precedence over laws recognized by the government."
Communication key to marital harmony

by Linda Perez
Senior staff reporter

Imagine, if you will, a possible scenario from the popular "Ladies Home Journal" column, "Can This Marriage Be Saved?". Kay is slim, pretty blonde with anxious blue eyes and a distinct edge of desperation in her voice. Carl, a handsome, conservatively dressed man, rarely reveals his anxiety over any matter, personal or business. They have been married for two years and the strains of an everyday relationship are beginning to surface. Together they battle it out one night over the Currier & Ives china, the lumpy mashed potatoes and the cold meatloaf. Kay accuses her husband of a lack of sensitivity to her emotional needs, while Carl visibly bristles with anger. Clearing his throat, he mutters to himself how he has been unappreciatively dressed throughout their marriage.

The story continues, with each side presenting their view, and the counselor rendering his decision to the reader. He concludes, "How do you convey a sense of caring and worthwhileness to your mate," Schlachter asks. "Or how do you say, 'I’m angry at you' without throwing food. We need verbal communication; we can’t read each other’s minds.

But social worker Roy Schlachter, assistant director of ambulatory services at Cleveland Metropolitan General Hospital, does not think that there is enough media play on the good marriages, the marriages that have survived and been genuinely satisfying for both mates. He does not ascribe to the popular notion that marriage is a 50-50 deal.

"THAT's a bunch of rubbish," Schlachter said. "If someone's coming home from work and they've had a rough day or they have had a rough day at home, they will need understanding and kindness. Someone will have to take on the responsibility of giving time to hear the other.

"In an era dominated by what Schlachter refers to as a microwave mentality and instantaneous gratification is sought after as the elixir to all life's problems, few realize the importance of communication within not only a marriage but all types of relationships. Yet the key is communication, he maintains.

"How do you convey a sense of caring and worthwhileness to your mate," Schlachter asks. "Or do you say you're angry at me without throwing food. We need verbal communication; we can’t read each other’s minds."

But ONE cannot communicate unless he has clear role models to follow, he contends. Such role models are actually drawn from those persons one respects, Schlachter explains.

Married for 24 years to his social worker wife Lillian and the father of three children, he recalls with a grin his days as a radio talk show host, and how one couple resolved a communication breakdown in their marriage.

"This woman called in. She recognized that neither she or her husband could verbalize their feelings easily," Schlachter related. "As it turned out, they worked out a code to signal their distress to one another. She would wear her apron inside out and he his tie askew. If either or both were upset, they would plan a project where they would work side by side and talk about their experiences, all the while avoiding eye contact."

"While he realizes that many would laugh at such "radical" communication, Schlachter shrugs his shoulders, maintaining the important thing was that it worked. Unlike many of his psychology counterparts, he does not advise only persons with complementary personalities to consider marriage, or that stresses or problems are indicative of a bad marriage."

"I don't like formulas. If you're different, and I would hope that you are to some degree, it can still work out. Marriage is an invitation to try life together, in the spirit of generosity," Schlachter explained. "If it doesn't work out, you've never failed completely. And if it does, the things that you will remember and derive the most enjoyment from is how you and your mate resolved the difficult times."

But most young people venture into a marriage romanticizing it to be a promised land, he maintains. It doesn't take them long for them to be jolted by such realities as dirty underwear and burnt food. Staring off into space, he parallels marriages and indeed all human relationships to mankind's last grand and glorious frontier.

"TECHNOLOGY has taken care of all our basic needs," Schlachter says, a teasing smile on his face. "But how does one talk to people? That's something we have yet to learn."
Weddings take on modern settings

by Marilyn Rosinski

staff reporter

Given the recent period of non-conformity, weddings outdoors were not that unique. In the woods, on a pier, or at a park were fairly common locations during the 60's and 70's. Gene Keil, minister at United Church of Church, said.

Many ceremonies still take place in locations such as Oak Openings Park. But weddings today prefer the conventional ceremony — white dress, and candlelight complete with ‘Here Comes the Bride’ and the promise to “Love, honor, and cherish,” Ross Miller, Campus Ministry, said.

The site of the ceremony should not overshadow the wedding itself, Miller said. The wedding ceremony should not be a side issue. And all the guests.

The location had played a big part in their courtship, but basically they wanted an unusual location.

A Toronto couple decided to get married on a moving street car. The transit authority cooperated, even renaming the trolley car "Devotion" in their honor. The bridesmaids, groomsmen, minister, and sixty guests all boarded at a different stop along the route.

Marriage on a moving street car is one non-traditional option. In 1987 nine young couples (of fifty invited to participate) said their vows as a group before the city magistrate in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, New York. The city sponsored their first "wed-in" in conjunction with local merchants. For a cost of $2,500 per couple, everything from tuxedo, rings, cake, flowers, dresses and hon- should be able to see the couple take their vows, he said.

A clear view is not always possible when a couple makes their promises while parachuting from an airplane. Or like the couple featured on "That's Incredible" recently who took their vows wearing scuba gear and then fell into the water together.

WHEN SELECTING a location that is meaningful in their lives or courtship, a couple can select a unique location for their wedding cer- mony. Jane and John, a Bowling Green couple, were married on the sailboat where he was a crew mem- ber. In water-front communities such as Vermilion, this is an almost com- mon-place location.

Modern touches personalize vows

by Becky Bracht
senior staff reporter

Many of today's couples are creating their own wedding ceremonies by mixing traditions with contemporary ideas.

A totally traditional wedding is one in which the couple uses the traditions from their cultural and religious backgrounds, but does not personalize the ceremony in any way, Father John Blaser, St. Thomas More, said.

"A contemporary marriage is a marriage which brings alive the traditions but is meaningful for today," he said.

"It's important to be in touch with your traditions, but also to look behind what they mean and to create them in a new way," Blaser said.

IF A COUPLE takes an active part in creating their own ceremony it will be more memorable, not only for the couple but for the guests as well.

"Just following tradition can be deadening," he said.

"It's a challenge to use traditions in a creative way," he said. The planning of the ceremony becomes fun when the couple has the freedom to use creativity.

Many couples choose to rewrite the marriage vows. Although this is flexible from couple to couple, the new vows must express the meaning of a Christian marriage, Blaser said. The vows must reflect the ideals that will last a lifetime and that it will be exclusive, and the partners will not have a relationship with another person.

One couple married at St. Thomas More personalized their ceremony by showing a slide show of their courtship during Eucharist or communion, Blaser said. This helped bring everyone closer together since many of the wedding guests were in the pictures.

MUSIC composed by the groom was used in one ceremony, while in another, since the bride was a dance major, one of her friends performed an interpretive dance during the ceremony, he said. Things like this make the wedding special and more meaningful for each couple.

Music can help set the mood of the ceremony. Flutes and guitars are used often as alternatives to the organ. Usually the couple's friends perform the music when other instruments are used.

"There are lots of options within the tradition," he said. "We try to be open to a couple's creativity.

The tradition of having the father give the bride away is still strong today. Recently, however, the mother is also taking part in this tradition.

Part of the reason this is changing is because the man is not always the head of the household in today's society, he said.

Sometimes the groom and his parents will also walk up the aisle at the beginning of the ceremony, Blaser said. Because this is such a drastic break from tradition, it is sometimes met with negative feelings among guests.

"For the ceremony to have meaning to the couple it must be a blend of contemporary and traditional ideals," he said. "In this way, they make modern traditions, living traditions. That's the right spirit of celebration," he said.
