Pro-lifers use graphic photos

"Abortion is a word that's tossed around... and it's not really reflected on. By showing these pictures, we're shaming brutality—that's hard to fathom without them."

The Sunday evening news has gone from showing Green State University, and what was a sad sight. Through the days, students are sitting at their computers, TV's cigarette smoke, games, and Internet surfing. "Why do we sit through all these hours of class Monday through Friday? Is there little need to sit through college? Why is it so important? I learned quite a bit here at State University, and oh what a waste of time to nourish myself during the homework I'd planned," we often tell our children. "I don't want to study, I want to do something else," they say. For students preparing a speech, studying for an essay, putting together a poster, or writing a research paper, the idea of such tasks, and the idea of completing them, can be overwhelming. People are often overwhelmed by the idea of completing tasks, and the idea of completing them.

Four students injured, one dead in school shooting

STAFF REPORTER

MORROW, Ga. — A gunman shot and killed a student and wounded three others Wednesday at a New Orleans high school, police said.

Chief Eddie Compass said there were no indications that a terrorist was involved.

"There were no immediate signs on possible motive or how this gun got through metal detectors and guards at the school," he said.

Anthony Amato, school system superintendent who was on the job only since February, tried to calm parents for six hours with words of "where we've been." Amato said.

One of the students, a 15-year-old girl, was in surgery at the Medical Center of Louisiana in New Orleans with more than one wound.

Spokesman Tony Frongillo said.

Two other girls, both 16, were wounded. One of them was in surgery at the Children's Hospital in New Orleans.

The identity of the dead student, a boy, was not immediately released.

"Sarah, grade 12, black hair, 16, said he was in the gym when it happened," Compass said.

"I've trained my children to study the area when we go to school," one of the students' mothers said.

"He was injured in the behind area, and we're told he's going to be fine," she added.

Compass said.

"This is the first time this has happened in a school," he said.

"I've been schooled in this area, and I'm supposed to have security," Compass added.

The shooting occurred around 10:30 a.m. Students were ordered to stay in their classrooms after the shooting.

City officials said the school is one-block from the police department.

"The vets are being asked to watch for diseases that can be passed from animals to humans — those that are found in other countries but are rare or unknown in the United States," Amato said.

The Sept. 11 attacks also raised fears of other bioterrorism, said Dr. Radford Speck, the dean of the University of Pennsylvania's School of Veterinary Medicine.
