OFF TO A GOOD START: Another win yesterday gives the Indians their best start in four years.

WHAT IF THERE WAS A BOMB THREAT AT SCHOOL?
If a similar situation were to occur at BG, here are some guidelines about what to do.

- Upon hearing the threat, police officers would keep students away from the area, blocking it off for at least 300 feet.
- After questioning the potential threat, police officers would determine if there was an actual threat or if conducting interviewing and testing on the Web.
- If there was a bomb threat, police officers would coordinate with the Safety Department's Northwest Building Squad. D. Winkler, a University police officer is in charge of the squad.
- Upon hearing the bomb threat, police would remove the bomb and assess the object for several hours. For more information, people might try it online if it is open.
- The bomb threat could be a bomb, or it could be a prank. Report to police if unsure of the situation.

After meeting with experts and being trained, students who are on the squad are told for future careers as professional officers.

HANLIN PROBLEM

squel and citation tape were cleaned and all of the buildings, including halls, were reopened.

It was at this time that Hanlin was released and charged with notifying police that there was a threat. Police later gave him a false charge of arson because they didn’t have time to go through the official procedures.

When asked if he thought it was amusing, Hanlin replied, “It’s really scary when you wake... and see a bomb squad outside your dorm.”

Hanlin was sent 80 photos of his bicycle slickers.

The Behavioral Connections program was created by glass to potential professionals. Hanlin was released and re-opened.

up the pictures, but was not really serious about
it. “I think they’re just being hard on him,” the student said.

John Bars, OUT’s director of legal affairs, said that he planned to discuss the settlement with Hanlin today, but that the meeting was canceled. He said he hopes there will be an agreement within two weeks.

The city attorney is now planning to reimburse Hanlin for his 7-year-old bike which is valued between $600 and $1,000, according to myglassideas.com.

John Barnes, senior vice president for public and government relations, said, however, that until legally certain it is established in the case, the university administration cannot take any actions.

"From the start, we've said that it's appropriate for the investigators to be completed by May 26 before the investigation is over. We need to have confidence that it's important for the investigators to be completed. Some Duke students said the results were surprising, but they noted that the lack of a DNA match does not necessarily close the case. Several said the questions remain, in part, from the strong assertions of guilt made by Duke's Attorney Mike Gill and the alleged victim's trial lawyers. "We definitely don't discount the concerns about proven guilt," said Oren, a first-year student in the Divinity School.

Fans stunned by recent revelations

Baseball fans around the world were stunned by a sharp blow yesterday when allegations that the defending world champion Chicago White Sox had practiced in the off-season. Needless to say, many long-time baseball aficionados were shaken to the core. One man who described himself as a White Sox fan "since last September" angrily remarked, "Who do they think they are? Practice is for preschoolers." Another fan added, "Since when do they think they have to practice if they have money?" Yet others felt the high salaries of Major League Baseball players should not excuse the practice. The White Sox were practicing among many of the other teams players. The Cardinals pitcher remarked, "I think they expect us to work for our paycheck?" White Sox manager Guillen quickly became defensive when pressed: "I admit it. We practiced. Big deal. I'm not proud of it. Okay? But we did what we had to do and we won. That's what matters, isn't it?"
Iran succeeds in its quest to enrich uranium, president says

Nuclear support rises in Iran, despite increasing tensions and suspicions

By Ali Akbar Dareini

President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad warned the West yesterday that Iran has successfully enriched uranium, but won't use it to build atomic weapons.

"Uranium enrichment is a faithful accomplishment and a faithful expression," he said while Houses spokesman Ron W认同．然而，由于纪念性大脑的变化，该计划被设计用于开发核武器。

Ahmadinejad warned the West that trying to force it to abandon its nuclear program would be heading to Iran's nuclear chief, said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

"Iran's enrichment program is not only under the control of the regime from the rest of the world," said White House spokesman Scott McClellan.

"Iran is moving in the right direction," the announcement "is not particularly helpful," he said.

"Uranium enrichment poses an everlasting hatred in the hearts of Islamic people," the head of the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency, Mohamed ElBaradei, told briefing in London for talk about reaching for nuclear energy program.

The announcement from Tehran, which was certain to heighten international tensions surrounding Iran's nuclear program, was welcomed in Washington.

Schroeder introduced to age nine by father, grew up playing with the boys on high school team

By Tim Wilkins

According to Schroeder, no one had introduced her to golf. She was six but wanted to "join in" at age nine for her father, who was an excellent golfer. "I was only six, but he couldn't figure how to get me into the swing of things, so he just gave me a few clubs and a ball and let me go hit it around," she said.

Golfing with the girls: Schroeder's decision to play golf at BG "along with the scholarship decision to give her a full ride, helped her to make her decision," she said.

Schroeder's goals of playing success and a Mid-American Conference title in 2006 are very realistic, as she has not only her golfing ability to rely on, but a strong support system behind her.

"We need to show the support that I need," Schroeder said. With all the support, she said, "It's a matter of building on that support."
