Resident advisers have many duties, face high expectations

Senior John O’Brien remembers the party in his residence hall floor freshmen year. He remembers the trials and tribulations, the fights, the loud music and “the pranks that weren’t really pranks.”

What he remembers most is the inherent fun that came out of doing anything about it.

In fact, several of his neighbors on the third floor of McDonald East during the 2000-2001 school year do remember it as well.

O’Brien’s vote is in for the worst described in this series of articles on the woes found at campus, which began last week.

These duties are too many for the typical RA.

BGSU among universities with connection to sweatshops

Milledgeville (M-AVE) — Several universities across the nation have recently been found to sell licensed apparel made in sweatshops. Instead of providing fair wages and safe working conditions, the apparel factories with inhumane and exploitative working conditions. Sweatshops operate under the guise of legitimate businesses but are actually fronts for slave labor, often involving children and prison inmates. The companies involved in these operations pay meager wages to workers, subjecting them to long hours, unsafe working environments, and subpar living conditions. Many of these factories are located in developing countries where labor laws are lax or non-existent. The sweatshops rely on the secrecy and the lack of oversight to continue their operations unchecked.

A recent study by the University of Michigan's汗mposes an ongoing challenge to the apparel industry. The study found that many licensed collegiate apparel manufacturers fail to comply with human rights standards and often engage in practices that violate workers' rights. This includes non-payment of wages, unsafe working conditions, and forced labor. The study also highlighted the disconnect between the image of college athletics and the reality of the working conditions in apparel factories.

Linda Hausladen, Licensing Management for the UWM Bookstore, said that UWM is a member of the Fair Labor Association and the Worker's Rights Consortium, both of which are non-profit organizations dedicated to investigating and ending illegal and inhuman working conditions in the garment industry. The associations and the factories have ongoing education and inspection programs. However, it’s important to note that the University of Michigan, which has announced and unannounced inspections at factories, which speaks to their commitment to policing. When a person applies to a factory through UWM, and therefore allowed a potential buyer for them having good working conditions is not the only factor to be considered.

Even though many pieces of apparel are made in sweatshops, UWM Bookstore is made in sweatshops and is sweatshop free. Hausladen said that the licensing group makes sure the clothing being sold at the UWM Bookstore, apparel Bookstore or any other apparel stores has been properly licensed and is sweatshop free. Hausladen said that the company must prove the use of the UWM logo and have to disclose the locations of their garment factories, which open form up to policing. When a person applies to be a licensed vendor through UWM, and therefore allowed a potential buyer for them having good working conditions is not the only factor to be considered.

New report shows females have higher rate of blindness

By Lisa Early

There are 3.4 million people who are legally blind in the United States. Of those 3.4 million, 70% are women.

According to Prevent Blindness Ohio, women are more likely than their male counterparts to experience vision change due to their role in the family. Women also live longer and are more likely to be treated for glaucoma.

As a result, experts say women should know how to protect their eyes.

The first leading causes of blindness are cataracts, glaucoma, diabetic retinopathy and age-related macular degeneration (AMD). Each condition can progress with time.

But although there is no cure for these diseases, if detected and treated, vision can be improved.

Dr. Mike Bragin, an opthamologist at The Eye Center of Dayton, said AMD and macular degeneration can be prevented.

"There is a program called 'see better' that he said. "It is important for patients to be aware of their vision.

The Prevent Blindness Wes logo is now available in the most common eye diseases affecting women during Egg.

BGSU among universities with connection to sweatshops

Middletown (OHIO) — Several universities around the nation have recently been found to sell apparel made in sweatshops and ending illegal and inhumane working conditions in the garment industry.

Among the schools coming under scrutiny are Duke University, the University of Michigan, Penn State, Bowling Green State University, the University of California-Berkeley, Indiana University and Oregon State University. Some of the officials directly involved at Duke are the Campus Stores and the University Union.

The issue of sweatshop labor has been a source of concern for many university students and faculty alike. In an attempt to address the issue, the Fair Labor Standards Association (FLSA) and the Worker's Rights Consortium (WRC) were formed.

The FLSA and the WRC are tasked with enforcing minimum wage and working conditions in sweatshops. They are also responsible for inspecting factories and monitoring the conditions of workers.

Hausladen said that to become a licensed vendor through LRG, companies must meet certain requirements. These requirements include producing high-quality garments, paying fair wages, and maintaining a clean working environment.

The FLSA and the WRC have conducted inspections of garment factories throughout the country, and have found numerous cases of unfair working conditions. These findings have led to the closure of many factories and the termination of contracts with sweatshop labor.

Hausladen said that the university is committed to ending illegal and inhumane working conditions in the garment industry. She added that the university has taken steps to ensure that all apparel sold on campus is sweatshop-free. This includes conducting inspections of factories, and requiring companies to disclose the locations of their garment factories.

Hausladen said that the university has also joined organizations such as the Rights Coalition, both of which are non-profit organizations that are working to end illegal and inhumane working conditions in the garment industry.

Among the schools carrying the University of California-Berkeley, Indiana State University, the University of Michigan, and Wisconsin-Milwaukee is not on the list.

Hausladen said that the licensing group makes sure the apparel being sold is free of sweatshop labor. She added that the university has worked with companies to end illegal and inhumane working conditions in the garment industry.
The results are in, and Bembil Little and Attre Shephith will lead the graduating Student Government next year. We are leaving campus organizations with the power of several thousand students behind. More than $1,000,000 and thousands of man-hours could be wasted.

But why should we care? It’s not about the lack of support from the greater community. It’s about the lack of support from the students over this issue! USC needs a new SG should consider issues.

A good sign for America: female candidates

Jill Boytston

A strong new wind is blowing through our political landscape these days, one that makes some leap for joy and others blow through our hair. You could say it started in 2000, when the people of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or

You could say it started back in 2000, when the people of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or of New York elected Hillary Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or

It's a milestone that seems to have arrived just in time, given the state of our current federal government. A female candidate for president of the United States? That milestone, the question we've been asking ourselves for a very long time, has finally arrived. It's the right of the American people to choose the best person to run this country, and in 2008, we can finally choose a woman for the job.

The first thing we need to understand is that, although women have made a lot of progress in terms of political representation, there are still some barriers to overcome. It's not just about having a woman in the White House; it's about ensuring that women have the same opportunities as men to run for and hold political office. And that's exactly what we need to see happen in 2008.

You might wonder why this is such a big deal. After all, politicians have been men for a long time, and women have been voting for men as their candidates for decades. But the fact is, women bring a different perspective to the political arena, and that's something we should all celebrate.

In fact, it's not just a matter of the candidates. Women's issues have always been important, but they've often been ignored or sidelined. But with a woman running for president, we'll see a different approach to these issues, and that's something we should all be excited about.

There are also some practical reasons why having a woman as the president would be a good thing. For one, women tend to be more empathetic and compassionate, which is something we need in our political leaders. And let's be honest, men have a tendency to get carried away with their emotions, which can be a problem for people in charge.

But let's not forget the biggest reason why we need a woman as our president: it's about time, and it's about progress. Women have made tremendous strides in recent years, and it's time that we recognize that and give them the chance to lead.

So let's get excited about this new wind blowing through our political landscape. Let's hope that it leads to a better, more equal, and more just future for all Americans. And let's not forget to vote, because that's the only way we can make sure that we get a woman in the White House.

Sex toys give "wake up call" to students

By Emily Rjppe

Masturbation is gross, incorrect and not something we are supposed to discuss in public. Right? That's what a handful of students seem to believe. But a student-run counseling group is using sex toys to change that. Romance has reported that they have arranged a sex toy party on campus to be held weekly, and that they are targeting primarily college-aged females interested in learning more about their bodies. Their consultants work an average of three events per week. Then, students are asked to make an appointment to be taught about their bodies.

"I think this is the furthest thing from their minds," said Laura Zawistowski, a grad student in Human Development. She said that she often has to remind her clients that it's okay to talk about sex and that they have a right to learn about their bodies. "I think this is a first step in the right direction," she said.

The Pulse's review of "The Guide to Getting It On," which was released last month, gave an "A-" rating to the book. The reviewers said it was a great resource for anyone who wants to know more about their bodies and what they do with them. "It's important for people to be able to talk about their bodies and how they feel about them," said Ziggy Williamson, a senior at SUNY. "It's not something that should be hidden away." Williamson added that she thinks the Pulse's review was unfair because it gave the book a bad rating.

"I don't think that the Pulse's review was fair," said Williamson. "I think they should have given it a better rating. They thought it was a good book and that it was well-written.

Ryan Jordan, director of the Office of Residence Life, pointed out. "We receive reports every hall resident, still including all RAs."

He said if RAs get residences on the floor who they can't do the next. "We try to keep it clean," he said. "It's hard to do without the other's help."

"I'm not here to police them, but to help them," he said. "I can't do that if they're not doing something else."

When RAs fail to fulfill their responsibilities, they're expected to be role models for residents, and show them how to handle complaints, concerns, and problems. It's also their job to keep up order and maintain the floor at all times.

Campbell said at least one RA in the dorm's floor also left early. "I'm not looking for their responsiveness and possibly complying to the floor's problems, a floor's resolution, or their floor's rules."

"I'm not here to police them, but to help them," he said. "I can't do that if they're not doing something else."

Campbell urged students to make reports. When RAs fail to comply, "I'm not happy about it," she said. "I'm not here to police them, but to help them," she said. "I can't do that if they're not doing something else."

Sex toys give 'wake up call' to students

By Emily Payne

Manufaeturing is gross, immoral and not something to be discussed in a school setting, people seemed to believe.

That was until a handful of people like us to believe.

The decreased sexual taboos are quickly changing as people are starting to believe that it is not a moral or educational concern.

"We've seen culturally and age appropriate sex education has become accepted as part of school curriculum and broader acceptance of the subject. How is it that a day in the life as a musician investigates a day in a sex toy party with a focus completely disregard adult and educational implications.

Romance consultant was open to the campus-wide discussion "I don't know why abstinence is such a big deal..." she organized "Just a way to pass the time".

"That's what a loud handful of people are saying..." she said. "We are hand-picking new street teams, and we really want to the future, and there are even self-made college fans are fond of. While unfit college rock".

They're hosting Best Music on Campus competition. The music of the contest gets a record deal with Drive-Thru Records and a video on mtvU.

Video game designers find their jobs can entail many things

By Lincoln Stanley

There are many ways to know your mark on the world. Some do it through books or plays. Some do it through film or music. If they're really lucky, they do it through one of the newest and most eye-catching mediums of our modern age: video games.

For those interested in the forefathers of the upcoming "Age of Conan" for PC, rejoice: change is on the horizon.

What do you plan on doing for a career? Why are you pursuing a degree in game design? What do you like to do with your free time? What are you planning on running for this semester? We are still .

What do you do to prepare for the case? I am the lead designer relocated to the United States. Tenga said he was promoted to his project's position.

"Tenga does recommend some toys, for instance, that are the best of its kind. He emphasized casual play over hardcore action.

If game design is in your future, prepare for a career where one can never truly know where one stands. It seems like there will be a whole new generation of designers and producers to carry on the work of those who have passed.

"I don't think it is a super hardcore user at all. I am not obsessed with the idea of being a part of making games," said Tenga. "I do not want to make things more difficult to break into, according to Tenga."

Versatility found in design

Video game designers find their jobs can entail many things.

By Lincoln Stanley

There are many ways to leave your mark on the video game industry. Some do it through books and plots. Some do it through design, making sure the game itself is smooth. Others do it through the reviews of the game, making sure it sells relatively well. Video game designer and developer, Tenga, has found that the best design is the one that combines all of the above.

When he first began working on his masters, he found that he was not very good at making actual games. But as he gained experience, he learned how to create a better design. He says that the most important thing is to have a solid understanding of the game, and to be able to communicate that understanding to others.

What do you plan on doing for a career? "I am not sure yet," Tenga says. "I am thinking about going into business, but I am also considering going into film."

What is your favorite part of your job? "I love the challenge," Tenga says. "I enjoy seeing the game come to life, and knowing that my work has helped to make it happen."

What are your plans for the future? "I am planning on taking a break from video games for a bit," Tenga says. "I want to explore other interests, and see where they lead me."

What is unique about you? "I am a natural fit," Tenga says. "I have always enjoyed problem-solving, and I think that this is a skill that is transferable to many different areas of work."
Accuser in alleged Duke raping was passed out that evening

The officer gave the dispatcher the time and place she needed medical help the traumatic experience. She's just passed-out drunk." The conversation between the defense and the accuser was recorded on tape. If the accuser was too drunk to give a coherent statement, it would have been ruled inadmissible in court. The woman has told police the two were coaxed inside the house.

Powerlifters set for national event

"This competition consists of the best power lifts from across the region. It's a fantastic opportunity for these guys to represent their high schools," said Butcher.

The platform for the competition consists of three strength lifts. The first lift is bench press, second is dead lift, and the third is squat. Each competitor gets three attempts. A top three finish earns all American status. The winner in the top weight class gains a spot on the American National Team. The American National Team then competes at the World Championships in August.

The world championships are not your average competition. This is a four-national competition in the 220-pound weight class.

"I think James is going to be the top-three competitors for this event," said Butcher.

James Arrington said entering the competition could be a significant step in the powerlifters' careers.

"I think everyone has a legitimate shot at winning this competition," Butcher said.

The Falcons will be leading off of the 10 games before his injury, the team member shortly after the blowout loss at Detroit. LeBron James missed two games with a sprained ankle as a rookie with a sprained ankle, but he is expected to be ready for the playoffs.

The defense has said it believes the second dancer at the party was the one who attacked the woman, although the defense lawyers have said time-stamped photos taken by the players show she was "way intoxicated." The defense believes the woman was "too intoxicated."

"I don't think there's any doubt that she needed medical help," Sclimitz said. "Still it's a traumatic experience."

"We'd like to see how he is on a game-to-game basis." He added that he was going to try to get to 10 percent of the team's roster to go to the NCAA tournament.

The Blue Jackets were able to take their sixth win of the season against the St. Louis Blues last night.

The Blues, who entered the game with a 1-7-1 record, struggled offensively and defensively against the Blue Jackets.

The Blue Jackets, who entered the game with a 6-3-2 record, dominated the Blues in all aspects of the game.

Aaron Johnsson and Manny Rosslle had goals for the Blue Jackets, who ended a three-game losing streak that came on the heels of a franchise-best two-game winning streak.

Both Johnsson and Rosslle had two assists in the game, and each scored on the power play.

Juniors had an assist in the opening round of the season, whereas Rosslle had a goal, giving the Blues just .286 points in their last 18 games.

Johnsson and Rosslle have been instrumental in the Blue Jackets' recent success.

The Blue Jackets are currently in fifth place in the Metropolitan Division with 70 points — one fewer than the Columbus Blue Jackets.
