Berg fills need for French cinema textbook

A new book by Dr. R.-J. Berg, French, is destined to be a welcome and indispensable guide to French cinema and to the study of film itself for French-speaking teachers and students of film.

Published in July by Yale University Press, À la rencontre du cinéma français is written in French primarily for French audiences. It will be marketed in North America and in Europe. Though in the United States there are several excellent textbooks on cinematic style and technique, there is an inexplicable dearth of them in France, Berg said—especially unexpected in a country that has been at the forefront of innovation in filmmaking.

The book has received an enthusiastic endorsement from none other than Michel Mourlet, a well-known writer and film critic in France (as well as a comrade-in-arms with Berg in the fight against the invasion of “franglais” into the French language). Mourlet writes, “I have known few works on cinema that have given me such an impression of competence and wisdom.”

“I’m very fortunate and honored to have found Michel Mourlet as the foreword writer,” Berg said appreciatively. Berg is also the author of three widely used textbooks on French literature and business French.

À la rencontre does not assume any previous knowledge of French cinema or background in film studies, though, as Berg writes in the preface, “It will help to like movies, and to have seen quite a few.”

It can serve as the core textbook for upper-level undergraduate and graduate French classes. Through a well-thought-out presentation of information, Berg’s goal was maximum flexibility. The book concentrates on stylistic analysis, or “close viewing,” but it can also be used in courses based on content, theme or issues, on a particular genre or movement, on the adaptation of narrative into film, or a number of other areas of study.

However, the book stands out in that Berg is adamant that film must be studied primarily as film—apart from any “issues” or “content.” Berg writes, “In a very real sense, the form is the film, and we, as students of film, need to study it.”

To that end, he takes as the basis of study two popular, influential and widely available movies, “A bout de souffle (Breathless)” Jean-Luc Godard’s 1960 masterpiece, and the more recent “Le fabuleux destin d’Amélie Poulain (Amélie),” both of which contain ample examples of film technique for a thorough examination of how directorial choices shape the work. Straightforward diagrams and definitions of terms are provided as background, and students engaged in a close study can directly see how it all applies to the films.

Berg also includes a section for classes engaged in making a film, with step-by-step instructions and even a prize for the best short film each year.

An accompanying website contains resources such as sample tests and quizzes, Web-based research projects and a forum page through which students may query Berg.

À la rencontre du cinéma français is so thorough that Mourlet compares it to the foremost other two “Roberts” —the “little Robert” and “big Robert” dictionaries of the French language. “Here is the ‘Robert Berg’ of the French cinema,” Mourlet writes.

Award-winning teacher speaks at BGSU

LouAnne Johnson, author of My Posse Don't Do Homework and Teaching Outside the Box, will speak at 7 p.m. Thursday (Oct. 28) in the Bowen-Thompson Student Union Theater. Johnson, whose My Posse book was made into the 1995 film "Dangerous Minds" starring Michelle Pfeiffer, is a nationally acclaimed teacher who previously was an award-winning U.S. Navy journalist and Marine Corps officer.

Her talk, based on her book Muchacho, is part of the Centennial Speakers Series sponsored by the School of Teaching and Learning in the College of Education and Human Development. The program is free and open to educators and the public. She is also offering a presentation for students at 10 a.m. Friday (Oct. 29) in 101A Olscamp Hall on "Teaching Outside the Box."

In 1989, Johnson began teaching reading and writing to non-English speakers as an intern at a California high school. Two years later she was appointed department chair of a special program for at-risk teens, which earned accolades for improving self-esteem, student retention and academic achievement of its students.

Johnson, who is an assistant professor of teacher education at Santa Fe Community College, received a bachelor's degree in psychology and a master's degree in teaching English. Additional books she has written include The Girls in the Back of the Class; School Is Not a Four-Letter Word; Two Parts Textbook, One Part Love; Queen of Education and Muchacho. Some of her books will be available at her evening presentation. In addition to her numerous speaking engagements, she has appeared on CNN, "Oprah," CBS "Eye to Eye," "NBC Weekend Today," "Maury Povich" and "Tom Snyder."
